The Anatomy of an Award

Stony Brook Wins a Big One!

It's official.

Stony Brook University Medical Center just won the coveted Consumer Choice Award. We are one of only two winners on Long Island. National Research Corporation surveyed consumers about 3,200 hospitals across the country and gave the award to only 233. A mere 7 percent.

What does that mean?

It means Stony Brook University Medical Center was selected as among the best hospitals in the nation by the real experts: People you know. People we've treated. Our hard work helped us win this National Research Corporation award. (And we'll work even harder to keep it.)

A Claim? You're Cancelled

When Your House is Near Water, Even an Inquiry Gets Called a "Claim"

-By Dan Rattiner

It is no secret that people on the East End, particularly those near the ocean, are worried they might lose their homeowner's insurance. This past spring, two insurance companies, Allstate and Nationwide Mutual Insurance Company announced they would be pulling out of the Hamptons market. In July, several others followed suit. The worry is that we might get hit by a mammoth hurricane or other natural disaster.

Personally, I have not worried too much about it. I live on the side of a hill, facing out across Three Mile Harbor Road to a view of the boats. It would take quite a blow to do anything to my house. One of the reasons is that the harbor rarely has any waves at all and here I am with my ground floor twenty feet up. Another is that my back is to the southeast, where a hurricane might come from, and the hill goes up behind me. And still a third is that we've had hurricanes, though none of any consequence in twenty years, and even then there was no damage to my house.

In fact, me and my house have a long history of paying money to the Chubb Insurance Company without asking anything of them in return. I've never made a claim. They are at least forty thousand dollars richer because of me. The only work they've had to do is cash my checks and maintain my file.

One year ago, however, my insurance agent developed medical problems and was forced into retirement. He's a local East Hampton boy. I spoke to his wife. She told me that the policy would continue, but for service I should call a company called Morstan, located in Port Washington. I had never heard of Morstan. My policy was with Chubb. But I did call them, just basement rec room below. On that day a week later, the whole ceiling in the rec room came down, making a big soggy mess. It looked huge.

I felt I had to, for the first time, call my insurance company. What was my coverage? What were my limits? Was this to be a claim? (There was also the precedent about car accidents. Get into an accident, always report it to the police so they have a record of it.)

I called Morstan, but did not get an immediate return call. And so, I called Chubb. I had a number. There would surely be someone there I could talk to.

The phone was answered by a woman named Rachael Daniels. We talked. I told her there had been a leak. I didn't know what it would cost to fix everything up. And I didn't have my policy anywhere I could find it. My agent had retired. I was between agents and so I had called her for information. She said she would get back to me with the parameters of my policy. And then she said this.

"Let me give you a reference number."

I was suspicious. "I am just making an inquiry," I said. "It's not a claim."

"We get lots of calls," she said. "This will lead you directly to the information about your call."

My reference number was 047505067424.

"Well, thank you very much," I said to Rachael Daniels.
 "The repairs don't even reach the level of the deductible, so there will be no claim. Thanks for the information."

to say hello. And they told me they were an insurance wholesaler and until I got another agent, they would help me as best they could.

As it happened, just a week later, I had a problem. A pipe beneath my kitchen sink had been quietly dripping. It had remained unnoticed, largely because water from this leak over the months had been collecting in the sheetrock and insulation of the finished ceiling of the Sagaponack's Dick Grasso, the deposed king of the New York Stock Exchange, seems to be living quite comfortably as he prepares to fight for the $100 million Attorney General Eliot Spitzer says he was overpaid. He received $140 million from the Stock Exchange in 2003. A civil trial is scheduled to begin in Manhattan Supreme Court early next year to settle the matter. On weekends, Grasso can often be found in Sagaponack, where he has a luxe four-bedroom, six-bath, 5,000-square-foot house valued at $6.1 million. Starting in 1999, he and his wife bought six multi-acre lots, four bordering his residence — which he is holding as an investment. Two other undeveloped properties in the nearby Parsonage Pond Road neighborhood owned by his wife, Lorraine, are valued between $1 and $2 million.

The evening was made possible by Leslie and Thomas Maheras, Heather and Steven Munchin, and Heidi and Jonathan Wald. Also in honor of the anniversary, children and families were welcomed to a sneak preview of CMEE's new "Discover My Community Exhibit." This exhibit, which runs through January 7, is hands-on tour through four of our community's outstanding non-profit organizations: The Retreat, Bay Street Theater, Southampton Hospital Foundation and ARF, with a display

BREAKING NEWS

Milk Spiker

Patricia Berzon, the woman that was arrested for deliberately poisoning her Sag Harbor boat-building boyfriend's milk with ant poison after the two got into an argument about a trip to Aspen, has plead guilty to the charge. As a part of her plea bargain with the county district attorney's office, Ms. Berzon, 55, has received five years of probation and has been fined $5,000 plus $320 in court fee. She was reportedly visibly nervous at her sentencing. Her boyfriend is choosing to stay with her. Makes you wonder what the case would have turned out to be if her boyfriend tried to poison her.

A few days later, she called back to tell me I had a $1,000 deductible policy. By this time, I also had the sink line repaired and carpenters over to assess the damage. They said it looked worse than it was. It would cost about $600 to fix it all up and repaint it.

"Well, thank you very much," I said to Rachael Daniels. "The repairs don't even reach the level of the deductible, so there will be no claim. Thanks for the information."

"You're welcome. Feel free to call Chubb at any time. And if you need to talk about this matter further, your claim number is 047505067424." Then she hung up.

The words "claim number" had gone through me like a lightning bolt. I tried to call her back, but could not get through. I left her a message but she did not return it.

And so I wrote her a letter. The back story, of course, was that I was concerned that Chubb would now penalize me for having made a "claim." Maybe even, God forbid, cancel my policy. We all know they do this. But I was polite. Here is what I wrote.

Dear Ms. Daniels:

Regarding claim #047505067424, I called you several times but have not been able to get through to you. Thank you for holding this matter as a possible claim. After looking into the matter, we have found out that we can make the repairs on the house for under $1000. Therefore, we have decided not to proceed to make this claim.

Sincerely, Dan Rattiner

When I got no response, I wrote her a second letter. Here that is.

October 2005.

Dear Ms. Daniels:

There was a misunderstanding about this matter. I called to inquire about making a claim. And, subsequently, learned that the damage caused did not reach the deductible. I then received a letter with the claim number and wrote you that there was to be no claim. This may be semantics but I don't want to find at a later date that I'm penalized for making a claim that was never made, or was the result of miscommunication.

I've left repeated messages about there not being a claim. Please respond in writing acknowledging receipt of the above.

Sincerely,

Dan Rattiner

And then she did write back. She would not budge.

Dear Mr. Rattiner

You submitted a claim to our office on 10/18/2005 regarding water damage to your home. After submitting the claim you confirmed that the loss would be less than your $1,000.00 deductible and asked us to close your claim, which was done on 10/25/2005.

Unfortunately, we are unable to delete your claim. Once a loss is reported, even if the claim is below the deductible, it will not be removed from our records.

If you have any questions, please call me at (800) 252-4670, ext. 4036.

Sincerely yours,

Rachael Daniels

Property Claims Adjuster

This may sound hard to believe, but several other letters went back and forth between us. I would not give up on this. She had to acknowledge the difference between a call requesting information and a call to make a claim. But she wouldn't. Her last call to me was on February 03, 2006. Here is a summary of that call from my secretary, Penny Ross.

Rachel Daniels replied to your query. She will be happy to talk to you, but the company policy is that when a policyholder reports a loss, it is documented as a claim, whether or not it was pursued. Many claims are reported and not pursued like yours, because it is important to get the loss reported before getting an estimate. So, even though it was reported only, there is a record of a loss. 800-252-4670. Copy on your desk.

I think you know what is coming. In the middle of the July Fourth weekend, this year, after paying them $40,000 and holding this policy for twenty years without ever having made a claim, I received a letter announcing the end of our relationship. My policy would expire on August 22, 2006. In one passage of the letter, they urged me to take note of the quickly arriving date of the termination. They told me I should quickly look to a state agency to provide me with the names and numbers of other "private insurance companies" who might insure the property. It would be terrible to have it sitting there uninsured, after all. Certainly I

A New Campus

Historic Buildings To Move To East Hampton's Town Hall Complex

By Dan Rattiner

Unlike in other communities on the East End, the Town Hall in East Hampton is set well back on the thirteen-acre property it occupies. In front of it is a grand front lawn several acres in size, which would really be grand if the Town Hall building behind it were in any way distinguished, which it is not. Built in the early 1960s, it was designed originally with a nice pitched roof, but for budgetary reasons, that was eliminated. Instead, East Hampton conducts its affairs in a single-story, flat-roof building of no great consequence that, upon some occasions, leaks.

Around twenty years ago, the town proposed building a new structure or at least adding an addition to it, but it was turned down. After that, a rather creative Town Supervisor — I think it was Tony Bullock — got the idea to add a little class to the experience of coming to Town Hall by making use of the front lawn for a sculpture garden. For six months after that, the sculptures remained but for some reason — it certainly was a good idea — the project came to an end. Things were put in and then not removed. Some neighbors objected to the sculptures, or to particular sculptures. There was a big discussion in town about whether a sculpture garden was a proper concern of a Town Board. Personally, I thought it was. Others did not. And so the project ended.

This past week, however, something absolutely stunning in its concept has been announced for the front lawn of Town Hall. I think the idea for it came from the creative mind of the wealthy art collector Adelaide de Menil who has an oceanfront home on Further Lane not far away. But wherever it came from, it was heartily embraced by Town Supervisor of the Dia Foundation, created galleries, museums and installations in such widely diverse places as southwestern New Mexico, Salt Lake, Utah, Beacon, New York and Bridgehampton, where a former church on Corwith Lane across from the Candy Kitchen, now a part of what is called the Dia Project, is dedicated to the work of Dan Flavin.

In addition to this, and it is not widely known, Ms. de Menil began a collection of small historic East Hampton buildings on her Further Lane property. The property is hedged. And it is about 35 acres in size. So you really can't see this. But beginning that year with the purchase of what was known as the "Purple House," an old eighteenth century home on Main Street that once stood next to the East Hampton Library, the project began.

Ms. de Menil bought the building, which was in the way of a library expansion, and she had the Kennelly House Moving Company gently lift it up, put it on a trailer and, after taking down many telephone wires, take it down Main Street one sunny summer afternoon to be put onto a foundation on the front lawn of her home. I took a photograph of it being moved at the time. It appeared in this newspaper and the linecut

Bill McGintee and very shortly the dirt is going to fly.

Adelaide de Menil and her husband Ted Carpenter have lived on Further Lane since 1972. An heiress to an oil fortune, Ms. de Menil has been involved not only in the collection of individual works of art, but also in the creation of entire museums around the country. With the rest of her family, she has, under the aegis version of it is published in this edition of this newspaper. Note the rather befuddled young man holding the big traffic light in his arms, standing right near the center of Main Street in front of the house. He is clearly wondering what to do with it before the house comes through. This was the light at Egypt Lane.

Bill McGintee

Other houses followed. They included the Peach Farm Farmhouse, built for Mary VanScoy in 1730 in the Northwest, a farmhouse on that same property built for Mary VanScoy and her husband, Dering Ranger, in 1796, a cottage from Cutchogue built around 1820, a barn called the Baker Barn, which was moved from Pantigo Road to make way for a telephone building, and another barn.

Say what you will about Ms. de Menil's "collection." But the truth is that she saved these houses for future generations. And she also kept them up and used them as part of her family's experience living in their Further Lane home.

Here is what she wrote to the East Hampton Star in 1974 about her plan.

"Here are my motives behind such an impractical venture. These buildings were designed like Coast Guard stations — practical, comfortable, beautiful in their simplicity. The result was perhaps one of man's greatest architectural achievements.

"It was the desire to preserve and present this achievement that led to saving and moving several of these houses to Further Lane.

"In 50 years, we're all going to be history. But a small bit of man's past will have been preserved here, in this case, a good moment from his past."

About two years ago, for one reason or another, the de Menils decided it was now a good time to place these historic buildings back into the community. They may have bought them for cash in the 1970s. They would put them back, transferring the title for $1, and transferring the buildings themselves at their own expense. It was time for these homes to rejoin the town.

Ms. de Menil's first attempt at this was rebuffed. She offered the Purple House to the East Hampton Library. She knew it could not go back exactly to where it was before. But it could go nearly back to where it was. There was a space in the back. But the Library said the Purple House could not be used because the library was suffering from a space problem. They would, in the future, need more parking. And if they did expand the library, the new addition should match the architecture of the current building, which was constructed about 1930.

By this time, in this story, you may have already figured out what is going to happen on the front lawn of Town Hall.

These eighteenth and nineteenth century buildings are going to be placed on a quadrangle on the lawn directly in front of Town Hall. They will serve as the "public face" of the Town Hall campus, and they will be occupied, one of them as the office of the Town Supervisor, another as a meeting room for the Town Council and a third for the offices of the Town Attorney. Behind these old buildings, the old Town Hall is to be torn down, and a much bigger new Town Hall constructed, with its design in keeping with the rest of the "campus."

I forgot to mention that besides everything else, the current situation with Town Hall is just a mess. The population of the town has quadrupled since the present Town Hall was built. And the needs of the town can no longer be attended to by this little building. Those that work for the town have long since outgrown the place. There are half a dozen trailer buildings out back — you don't really see them unless you go back there — and all of these

TRAFFIC CONES.... MORE USES...

Levy Hell Highway

Lessons From an Unnecessary Six Week Southampton Traffic Jam

By Dan Rattiner

The experts say that after a while, people tend to forget the bad things that happen to them and remember only the good. Thus there are the "good old days," which, if you think about them, weren't really.

In this context, I thought it would be important to point out four very interesting facts about the six weeks of hell that our County Supervisor Steve Levy just put those who work in the Hamptons through.

Last June, our local county legislator Jay Schneiderman came up with the idea of using traffic cones to create a second eastbound lane to solve the morning County Road 39 traffic jam commute for workers driving to work. In an eight-week experiment, Schneiderman showed that it worked. His boss, Supervisor Levy, then scrapped this solution for a very expensive different one that made the traffic even worse than it had been before they brought in the traffic cones.

Thus came the six weeks of hell, and I bet there are many funny but awful stories about what happened during the six weeks without the cones. But now the cones are back. And except for the stories, one supposes all is forgotten.

Did you ever wonder what this morning traffic jam cost every day? Here are some numbers.

The delay that every commuting motorist had to endure for the six weeks of Levy Hell was about an hour. It didn't matter how far you drove before you got into Levy Hell. Or where you had to go further east after Levy Hell. The delay between Shinnecock and the eastern side of Southampton, a distance of about ten miles, was an hour.

Tom Neely, the Southampton Town Transportation Commissioner, who has no control of what happens on county roads, told me that in one hour, about 2,000 cars pass any given point on County Road 39 when things

THE 1 MILLION EURO LAWSUIT AGAINST AIR FRANCE

By Dan Rattiner

A group of passengers aboard a non-stop Air France flight going from Paris to New York City has filed a lawsuit against that airline. They say they were terrified aboard this flight and it was caused by the irresponsible behavior of the crew.

The flight was an hour out of Paris when one of the crewmembers discovered that one of the passengers was named Bonnie Tyler, which is also the name of the singer of the wildly popular 1980s song "Total Eclipse of the Heart."

"That's me," she said.

"If we asked you to, could you sing it for us?" the stewardess asked.

"Sure," she said.

Another stewardess got on the public address system and said they were fortunate to have this famous singer on board and would they all like to hear her sing Total Eclipse of the Heart for them? A cheer rang out, though not from all the passengers, and as a result of this endorsement Tyler was invited up front to where just before takeoff they demonstrated the correct use of the life vest in the event that there is an emergency over water. And, over the PA system, she began belting it out.

People started singing along with her, and not very far into the performance, some of the passengers got up and began dancing in the aisles. Then more of them and more of them did. Soon there were about fifty people dancing in the aisles and about twice that many singing along at the top of their lungs in the seats, with Tyler on the PA system leading the way.

This is where the lawsuit says that those who remained belted in became terrified for their lives. Some had never heard of the song. Others didn't like the song. And all this banging around on the floor seemed like a dangerous thing that might cause the airplane to wobble out of control. Many of them said that by the time the song ended, they were shaking, frightened, suffering a ringing in their ears and in fear that Bonnie Tyler might sing it again.

The lawsuit is asking for a ruling in their favor for their money back on this terrible flight and one million Euros each in damages. • are moving smoothly. Of course, when you are not moving at all, there is nothing to report moving past any given point, but the figure of 2,000 per hour will give you a rough scale of the situation.

The morning commute takes three hours. 2,000 cars times three hours is 6,000 cars, so that is the approximate size of the commute as far as cars go. With an average of two people per car, that means there were about 12,000 people delayed every day. This represents about 15% of the population. So oh yes, there are going to be all sorts of stories, told for a while in a jovial way to make you laugh about how terrible it was, and then, after about a year forgotten about. Those were the days.

So I figure the additional and unnecessary costs of this traffic jam involved an hour of extra gas for 6,000 cars, and an hour of unnecessarily wasted time at an average pay of, say, $20 an hour for 12,000 people — which is the amount they lose from work.

6,000 cars each use, on average, three gallons of gas an hour. At $3 a gallon, that is $9 per car for a total of $54,000.

12,000 workers at $20 an hour wasted is $240,000.

And so, the direct costs of having this one hour traffic jam each day is $295,000. And each week it is $295,000 times five or $1,475,000.

At the present time, the State, the County, the Town and the Feds are squabbling over who should pick up the direct extra cost in police and highway department worker expenses for putting out the cones and then taking them down, which, I am told, is $7,000 a week. I've been told that this cost was one of the factors that Levy considered in canceling the traffic cone system. As you can see, the cost is negligible when compared to the damage done.

The second thing I want you to take away from all of this is the very cumbersome name of this highway. County Road Thirty Nine is pretty long. And it is also boring. It is not in the same league as, say, the Freedom Trail or the Sunrise Highway. It's in the same league with the Governor Thomas E. Dewey Thruway, which is the name never actually said anymore for the New York State Thruway.

I propose we rename this road the Levy Hell Highway. Just to get back at him. I think those who have businesses along this road will be happy not to have County Road 39 on their stationery. And in a hundred years, people will just think Levy Hell will refer to some Jewish Dutchman who did something important, whatever it was.

Waste money, is what it was.

So now it is time to move on. And we forgive and forget and tell stories and then tell about the Good Old Days with the problems we had on the old County Road 39, and in Westhampton Beach a few years earlier, the great Sunrise Fire.

But here's the third thing I want you to think about. Various companies around the country make a huge machine with rubber wheels — it looks something like a professional hockey rink zamboni — that can be driven by a highway department employee to move concrete barriers in a very short time from one lane to another.

The machine, actually a sort of truck, has a hole on the left side of the front where the concrete barriers slide in as the truck moves along, and then a hole on the right side of the back where the conveyor belt slides the concrete barriers out, but one lane over.

It's an expensive truck, but not too expensive. How expensive can it be? It takes about an hour for this big truck to travel the ten miles from one end of the traffic jam to the other, slowly moving over the concrete barriers one lane. And that's the end of the problem.

Hi There

Stony Brook Southampton Café? Stony Brook Southampton Bank?

By Dan Rattiner

Now I don't want to appear ungrateful, and I don't want to look a gift horse in the mouth, and I am certainly all in favor of the State spending $10 million this year to start fixing up the Southampton College campus this winter, and I love the new curriculum that the State will be bringing to the school, and I am very appreciative of everything that SUNY Stony Brook is bringing to the table here in re-opening the Southampton College as part of the State University system, but there's just one thing.

It's the name. At the big ceremony on Wednesday morning where Senator LaValle, who behind the scenes had made all this happen, and Fred Thiele Jr. from the Assembly and Congressman Bishop who helped and, of course, Shirley Strum Kenny from SUNY Stony Brook and many others spoke in praise of the new day that has dawned here, I began to wonder. It's the name.

They put up the big sign. It reads STONY BROOK SOUTHAMPTON. During this day, as all the bulldozers and workmen began to start work on fixing up this campus from the mess that Long Island University left behind, there were more signs put up. STONY BROOK SOUTHAMPTON the sign said at the main entrance. STONY BROOK SOUTHAMPTON read the sign by the soccer field. Even up on the highway, as you are driving along heading east on County Road 39, there is the new green and white metal sign reading STONY BROOK SOUTHAMPTON, with an arrow pointing to the Tuckahoe Road turnoff at the traffic light there.

Here's the problem. What is it? You are driving along the Sunrise Highway heading east, and you pass the green metal sign reading HAMPTON BAYS and another sign reading RIVERHEAD and another reading SHINNECOCK and then you come upon this.

"Didn't we pass Stony Brook?" she asked.

THE CASE OF THE LOCKED PRIVATE BATHROOM

By Dan Rattiner

Some people don't understand the big deal about chess. Two people sit at a table across from one another staring at a chessboard. Every twenty minutes, one of the people moves slightly. And that's it.

But others know the truth. On a championship level, it is about politics, intelligence, strategy and cunning. And you have to be a little crazy.

During the first half of October, an estimated half billion people around the world followed the World Championship chess match either over the Internet, on TV, or in the newspapers. As a sporting event, it drew more interest this year than any other on this planet, except for the World Cup Soccer Championship matches in Berlin.

The match has so far lasted 16 days. It is being held in one of the least known places in the world, in the city of Elista, which is the capital of Kalmykia, a republic in Southern Russia. The winner will get one million dollars. But so will the loser. So the real prize was the title of greatest chess player in the world, a title that has been in dispute for more than twenty years.

At this point, with the match three quarters over, it seems it will have been decided because somebody locked a bathroom. Chess fanatics around the world — certainly not here in America where October means baseball — continue to talk about it.

The groundwork for this match was laid, it is fair to say, in the mid-1980s when cracks were beginning to appear in the Soviet Union's battle against the United States in the cold war. The Champion of the World of Chess was a former Soviet soldier by the name of Anatoly Karpov. Nobody could beat him. He played a kind of cold, ruthless game. And he almost

"Yes, we did."

"So here it is again. Where are we going again? You turn right here to go to Southampton. And to Stony Brook."

"We're going to Amagansett."

"Maybe we circled around, and we're back at Stony Brook."

"Could be."

What is it? You make the right and you drive the long block to the end and there you come upon Route 27A, also called the Old Montauk Highway. Left is Southampton. Right is Stony Brook if you go far enough.

Harry Marmion, when he was President of Southampton College many years ago, got into an argument with the bigwigs over at Long Island University, which owned the place at the time. They wanted him to change the name of the place from Southampton College to Southampton Center of LIU. He objected.

"A center is a place where you go shopping," he told them.

It did not go over well. They told him it would have to be Southampton Center, and he said never, and so they said okay how about Southampton Campus of LIU and he said I don't like that either and so they fired him.

The windmill at Southampton College

For a long time, the place was called Southampton Campus of LIU, but then the people here on the scene running the place began to slowly sneak back in the name

Southampton College. It showed up first on napkins, and then on buttons and t-shirts and finally on a sign somewhere, but then LIU took it down. It was really still the Southampton Campus of LIU when LIU finally pulled the plug on the place in 2004, abandoning it, much of it to the elements, and sending the students and faculty packing.

So they put the names of two towns together, Stony Brook Southampton. But what is it? Stony Brook Southampton Café? Stony Brook Southampton Discount Clothing? The name cries out for its completion. And it will, I guess, come after a while.

For now, however, it will be affectionately referred to as Stony Brook Southampton and if people think that it somehow refers to two towns that are pushed together, well, they'll get used to the fact that it's not that, it's a COLLEGE.

Maybe just in little tiny print down there at the bottom. STONY BROOK SOUTHAMPTON College. Would that be so bad? • trailers are occupied by Town Department employees because there is simply nowhere else to put them. And there is another problem. Did you ever notice that there is no single phone number you can call at Town Hall where a single switchboard can transfer you over to the department you want to reach? Every department has its own phone number. So you have to hang up and call back. Still other departments, for example the Building Department and the Police Department, have actually fled. Police are now in their own building in Wainscott in a structure that is half again bigger than all of the old Town Hall. And the Building Department now has all its offices in a commercial office building one street away to the east. This has been some way to run a Town. And everybody knows it.

Now all the departments, except for the police department which is very happy up in the woods in Wainscott thank you very much, will come together in a new and much larger Town Hall, built where the old one was, and sheltering and overlooking the campus of early town buildings out front saved by Ms. de Menil and her husband for all these years.

What a wonderful end to this story. •

Wind Won't Cooperate

East Hampton Windmill Refuses to Turn at its 200th Anniversary Party

By Debbie Tuma

Hugh King, East Hampton's Town Crier and Village Historian, was running around the Hook Mill last Saturday, trying in vain to get the canvas-covered sails to spin. But despite his good intentions, on this 200th anniversary of the mill, the wind was simply blowing in the wrong direction.

"As luck would have it, we need a strong, southwest wind, and it's blowing in the exact opposite direction, northeast," sighed King. "It would have been great to see this old mill spin again on its bicentennial year, for Historic Windmill Day. But you can't call up on the cell phone, or text message, or hit enter on the computer, to get the windmill to turn — we need Mother Nature."

The windmill blades were covered in a white canvas, which was shredding from the wind and, throughout the day, people were touring it in honor of its big anniversary. King explained that this mill was built in 1806 by Nathaniel Dominy V of East Hampton, who used lumber brought over from Gardiner's Island. Until 1908, the mill operated on this Village Green, and then went unused for about 30 years, until it was eventually restored. King explained that this was originally one of three working windmills, and that the Pantigo Mill and the Gardiner Mill were both built in 1804. They originally sat on either side of a green at the south end of the village. While the Gardiner Mill still stands in its original place, the Pantigo Mill was first moved to Pantigo Road, and later moved to a private house on James Lane by its owner, Gustav Beuk, a former owner of Home Sweet Home.

"On Historic Windmill Day, we are celebrating all three mills," said King, who led tours of the other two mills as well last Saturday.

Sharing in the celebration of Hook Mill were two members of the Dominy family, who came out to share their stories of this landmark. Grace Dominy Renkins, 90, who spent her life

DOLANS TO TRY TO TAKE CABLEVISION PRIVATE

By David Lion Rattiner

Cablevision is back in the news in a big way. The company that powers almost every single television in the Hamptons and was a monopoly here for many years is getting an offer to go private from its biggest shareholders, father and son Charles and James Dolan, who founded the firm. The offer was made to Wall Street as a $19.2 billion leveraged bid for all of the shares of Cablevision.

This is the second time that the Dolan family has made an offer. The last time, one and a half years ago, they were rebuffed.

The company takes in revenue about $4.9 billion a year. The new offer is worth about 15 percent more than the one given a year and a half ago.

Why do the Dolans want to take Cablevision private? The biggest advantage is the difference between short-term thinking and long-term thinking when it comes to how the company is run. Because a public company has a legal responsibility to its shareholders, it is important that as much as humanly possible each business quarter does better than the prior quarter, even if it means that in the long run, the company will do worse. Companies sometimes get themselves into trouble by making poor decisions this way. Also, a private company is not required to disclose its financial documents to the public, only to the IRS. It becomes easier to make decisions. And sometimes one can make long-term decisions that can make earnings fall in the short-run, but in the long run will benefit.

The main disadvantage to a private company is that it is not as easy to raise money by selling shares of its stock to the public. A private company has to raise its money from banks or private investors, which is not as easy.

But the Dolans want the company and analysts say there is a good chance that they are going to get it. Cablevision is not just television, either. The company owns Madison Square Garden in New York City, Radio City Music Hall, the New York Knicks and the New York Rangers. They also own Optimum Online, which is a leading Internet service provider.

The father and son both agree on making the company private.

However, last year, there was a very serious disagreement over a satellite business the company wanted. James voted against his father. This newspaper reported on that issue.

in East Hampton, sat inside the mill, which she remembers well from her years growing up in this village.

"I used to come here as a young girl, and I watched them make corn and grain in this mill," she said. "The gears are very precise — the way they turn and grind up the corn. It's a marvel to watch it work." Grace Dominy Renkins graduated from East Hampton High School in 1933, and she stayed and raised a family in her hometown. Also joining her was Harold Dominy, 81, who has spent many years giving tours of the Hook Mill. He knows how the entire technical operation works, and he often leads tours for school groups and organizations. Dominy also makes precision clocks in his spare time, and over the years he has perfected this craft.

Last Saturday, he showed one group how the corn goes in one side of the wheel and comes out another spot, once it is ground into a fine powder. "This mill was built with fine precision instruments — it is extremely well made, and it has survived numerous hurricanes and never got ruined," he said. "Its 200-year survival is a testament to its strength and great craftsmanship, from an era where great pride was taken in its building. We can only hope it survives another 200 years for future generations to enjoy." He said, "Windmills have become the historic symbols of East Hampton, as well as Southampton Town."

"Historic Windmill Day" has been happening each year on Columbus Day, but next year, King said he plans to move it to September, when the winds are more apt to be blowing from the southwest. "We'll be moving our schedule to accommodate Mother Nature," he said.

would agree with that. To that end, in the letter, they went to the trouble of giving me the telephone number of this state agency. On the other hand, there was something else odd about the letter. As I turned this letter over and over, I noticed that nowhere on it was there any way to contact THEM. They had no return address, and they had no telephone or fax number anywhere. I had their phone number of course, but the fact that in their letter they would not give out either a phone number of an address where I could call or write them made me very angry.

I walked around the house. It was two stories high with lots of bedrooms and bathrooms. There were sliders and decks. There was a swimming pool with a bricked patio and a garden and a garage. There was a dining room and a library. Wouldn't it be my luck, on August 23, right in the middle of this year's hurricane season, just about 50 days away from my receipt of this letter, there would surely come a hurricane, the first since 1938 capable of flattening a house anyway, that would swoop in and, well, I didn't want to even go there. I'd have to get another insurance policy, if there were any way I could get one.

By this time, I had retained a new broker, of course. I told them what happened. And I told them about the "claim."

"They DID that to you?" my agent said.

"You've heard of this before?"

"On rare occasion. It's not nice."

"No, it isn't."

"Don't even worry about it. You have three different insurance policies with Chubb. Your credit is good. You pay your bills. We will find something before the week is out. But I am going to call them. This is pretty short notice."

She asked that I look at the letter again to see if they gave a reason why they were terminating the policy. There were many sections. I hadn't looked.

There was a reason.

UNACCEPTABLE WIND EXPOSURE, DUE TO SCIENTIFIC CHANGES TO THE WIND MODEL WE USE TO ASSESS OUR LEVEL OF EXPOSURE.

I don't believe this for a minute. On a harbor? And if it is true and they can prove it then why not just raise my rates?

Elsewhere in this letter — and I am sure they hated to write this though by law they had to — it says that it is against the law for them to red-line you on account of geographical location or the risk of the producer. I am not quite sure of what this means, but here is what I am going to do about all this.

I am writing letters to all the people who live on my street going up ten houses one way and down ten houses the other way to see if they have had problems with homeowner's insurance. I am filing a complaint against Chubb with the State of New York Insurance Department Consumer Service Bureau. I will have a hearing. And I will present the exchange of letters.

That's for starters. I will keep you informed.

Isn't it strange how we treat our insurance companies? There was a time, some years ago, when it was very hard to get a housekeeper to come over to clean your house for a day or two a week. The joke was that you'd never ask her to do anything. You'd actually clean up and make the beds and so forth before she came so she wouldn't be confronted with a mess. You would just pay her, and if she didn't show up you'd not even mention it. Just smile. She might leave.

Now we do this with our insurance companies. We pay them and pay them, and we don't even want to make a phone call to them. Not even an inquiry. It might cause them to cancel. Or raise the rates astronomically. Shhhh!

Interesting, wasn't it, about Harvey Silverstein's claim for damages done in the destruction of the World Trade Center. He had $2.1 billion in insurance "per event." He filed a claim for two events and his insurance company denied it. They said it was all one event. The two attacks on the two buildings were just part of one big plot. Silverstein went to court and won. It was two events.

I read that last year was the most profitable year ever for insurance companies in America. It came as something as a surprise to hear this, what with the increase in the number of natural disasters.

But you know what? If you only insure that which you know won't happen, you can laugh all the way to the bank.

I would be much more comfortable about all this if the insurance companies put themselves in the same boat as the rest of us, lost money covering big disasters for their customers, and then got government disaster relief money to make up for it.

And if it turns out I am wrong about what just happened to me, I shall apologize. •

Shinnecock Trial

Is This Land by the Bay Part of the Shinnecock Reservation?

By David Stoll

Tuesday marked the start of the civil federal trial between the Shinnecock Indian Nation and the Town of Southampton and State of New York concerning the status of the 79-acre Hampton Bays property known as Westwood. At issue is whether the parcel should be considered part of the Shinnecock tribe's reservation as opposed to regular land that the tribe happens to have purchased. Should the federal Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) approve the tribe's request for federal recognition, the status of Westwood becomes important, as Native American tribes may operate a gaming business only on tribal reservation property.

The trial, in the Eastern District of New York Islip courthouse, is the second stage of a lawsuit that has received much attention. In late 2005, Judge Thomas C. Platt issued a pre-trial ruling recognizing the Shinnecock tribe for federal purposes. The tribe, which calls itself the "oldest self-governing tribe of Indians in the United States," has long been recognized as an authentic tribe by New York State. However, the tribe's application for federal recognition, filed during the 1970s, was deemed complete only in 2003, and more than one-dozen completed applications were already pending at the time.

While Judge Platt's ruling seemed consequential at first blush, the BIA was not a party to the lawsuit, as Judge Platt had dismissed the agency from the case after bringing the agency in. A ruling cannot bind a non-party, and the BIA informed the Shinnecocks early this year that the tribe must proceed through the application process. The agency does not expect to begin consideration of the application until 2009, and the process could then take five years or even more. Recognition will be granted if the BIA finds that the Shinnecocks have maintained a continuous tribal government as part of a single, historically intact community. Given that New York State already recognizes

SOUTHAMPTON COLLEGE CEREMONY MARKS NEW ERA

By Alan Michael Braveman

October fourth was a glorious celebratory day for Dr. Shirley Strum Kenny, the President of Stony Brook University. She was glowing as she stepped to the podium to welcome the assembled guests. She thanked State Senator Ken LaValle for his dogged determination in acquiring the financial resources to buy the Southampton campus from LIU. Senator LaValle recalled how the idea of taking over the campus first came to him at luncheon meeting with Dr. David Steinberg and Roger Tillis of Long Island University's board of directors as they casually told him that they were closing the campus because it was too expensive to run. Senator LaValle related that he came up with the idea of Stony Brook taking it over in a "nano-second" and ran it by Dr. Shirley Kenny immediately. The rest is history.

State Assemblyman Fred W. Thiele, a graduate of Southampton College recalled how he had been bowled over by the concept of Stony Brook taking over the campus and how it turned out to be such a great fit for his alma mater. Dr. Kenny thanked Congressman Tim Bishop and town Supervisor Skip Heaney for their super-human efforts and unflagging support of Stony Brook's work to acquire the campus for a reasonable price and thereby prevent Long Island University from turning the campus into McMansions. Special praise was given to Supervisor Heany for his work in bringing about the "land moratorium that nailed LIU to the only future educational institutions" concept.

The zeal and enthusiasm for making this dream into reality was shared by everyone present and when the new campus sign was finally presented to the audience it was met with an overwhelming roar of approval. The speed with which the signs on county road 39 the tribe as such; it may stand to reason that the BIA will eventually reach the same conclusion. Today, there are 561 tribes recognized by the BIA. Their reservation land occupies 55.7 million acres.

If the Shinnecock tribe is granted BIA recognition, they would have the right to operate limited gaming facilities on their Shinnecock Hills reservation property, such as bingo. They would also have federal permission to operate table games and slot machines on the reservation land, but only if New York State were to agree. The current administration opposes such a casino, as do local politicians, but any future government could have a different view, particularly if the Shinnecock Indian Nation has the imprimatur of federal recognition.

In the trial beginning this week, Westwood is the focus. The history of the parcel, which is located just to the west of the Shinnecock Canal and is bisected by the Sunrise Highway, is unclear, which is why the fact-determination process of a trial is needed. The Shinnecocks argue that their long ownership of, and relationship to, the land entitles it to be given the same status as their Shinnecock Hills reservation. But the Town of Southampton and State of New York argue that it was never part of the original reservation, and because of certain sales and repurchases over time, the land would have lost any reservation recognition anyway.

The dispute began when the Shinnecocks began clearing land on Westwood. Although they later claimed they did so because they needed dirt for a ceremony on the Shinnecock reservation, the action was viewed as a provocation concerning the long-running dispute over whether they should be entitled to build a casino on the East End. The Town and State brought a lawsuit seeking an immediate injunction against further clearing. A state-court judge, Edward D. Burke, Sr., granted the injunction, and once the case was moved to federal court, Judge Platt extended the injunction, which still remains in effect, pending the trial.

If the land is not found to be reservation property, then the Shinnecocks will be required to comply with the same Town zoning rules that apply to other property owners. On the other hand, if the Shinnecocks prevail in court, a peculiar and complicated issue will arise. In one sense, this lawsuit placed the cart before the horse, in that the BIA does not recognize the Shinnecocks as an historic tribe yet. On the other hand, from the Town and State's point of view, Judge Platt has ruled that the Shinnecocks are a federal tribe. What this ultimately means, with respect to what the tribe may do with the land, may be a matter best solved by philosophers, or at least a team of highly-paid lawyers.

When Judge Platt ruled that the Shinnecock Indian Nation is entitled to federal status as a tribe, he based that decision on a number of historical facts, including that the Shinnecocks have been recognized by the State of New York for more than 200 years, were in possession of property in Southampton when the first European settlers arrived in the 1600s, and has historically been dealt with by the State and Town as a tribe.

Although most South Fork residents are opposed to construction of a casino in Shinnecock Hills or Hampton Bays, people also feel that the Shinnecock Indian Nation deserves respect as a tribe and that finding a way to ensure the tribe's economic self-reliance is important. Although that is a topic in and of itself, one solution may be found in Calverton or other locations west of the North and South Forks. There has been some talk over the years that a casino would be welcome in such places, should the Shinnecock tribe be recognized by the BIA. Indeed, according to the Shinnecock elders, they would prefer to build a casino on such a site, as it is more accessible, rather than on Westwood.

A House Tour Features Homes Where LIPA Meters Go Backwards

By Debbie Tuma

As sunshine washed over the East End last Saturday, residents learned how to tap into this never-ending resource with a tour of solar houses and businesses from Westhampton to Amagansett and on the North Fork. This was part of an island-wide tour of about 100 homes and businesses that use solar energy for electricity or heat. This event was part of the National Solar Tour & Green Buildings Open House on Long Island, and it was organized by The Long Island Power Authority (LIPA) and Renewable Energy Long Island (RELI).

Kathy Cunningham Faraone, of RELI and an organizer of this event, said, "We wanted to invite the public to take a self-guided tour of these homes and businesses for free, to gain insight as to how they can save money and also save the planet, from the overuse of fossil fuels." She said all the solar home owners had volunteered to be on hand to talk about their home conversions, and to hand out literature on solar power, at this fourth annual event.

"There are now about 750 homes across Long Island that are using solar power, and getting rebates from LIPA," Cunningham commented. She explained that LIPA currently offers substantial, upfront cash rebates

(up to $37,500) for the installation of solar electric systems. Combined with new income tax credits, these incentives can reduce the cost by 2/3.

With rising fuel costs eating into our own budgets, my friends and I decided to take this tour of four solar homes and one business within the Town of East Hampton. We started at Amaden Gay Insurance, which is located near the East Hampton Post Office, and is the first business in the local area to have converted to solar energy, which it did last June. We were instructed to go around to the parking lot behind this insurance building, where

RESCUED MOTHER DOLPHIN DIES, BABY DOLPHIN LIVES

By Sabrina C. Mashburn

Last Thursday, a baby Atlantic Bottlenose dolphin and her mother were rescued from the Sag Harbor Yacht Club's marina by a group of experts from the Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research and Preservation and a local animal-lover who happened to have a crane on the back of his truck. The dolphins had been stranded in the marina for two days prior to the rescue, and although it is common to see Bottlenose dolphins in shallow waters in warm climates, such as in the Florida Keys, healthy Bottlenose dolphins are only found near the Continental shelf edge and slope in the Northeast. The presence of these dolphins near Sag Harbor was a telltale sign that they were in distress. Riverhead Foundation Rescue Director Kim Durham explained that when "they were first seen on Tuesday, no one called us. We're trying to encourage people to call us as soon as they see these animals so we can assess their condition."

Once the Foundation was contacted on Wednesday, Durham and her staff began making the necessary phone calls to the NOAA National Marine Fisheries Service in order to obtain permission to enter the water and save the mother dolphin and her calf. The Riverhead

Foundation is the only facility in New York State licensed to rescue marine mammals; however, their rescue license is only valid when dealing with beached or stranded animals, and does not permit interaction with free-swimming wildlife.

Once permission had been granted to the rescuers, there was still a question as to whether or not the situation warranted immediate attention. The animals appeared to be healthy, and the resulting stress from being caught and removed from the water could have resulted in the death both animals. Durham also had to

we could view the large solar panels on two roofs of the connected buildings. Since they faced south, these huge glass panels glistened in the afternoon sun, reflecting its rays off the high-pitched roofs.

We were greeted by Nick Albukrek, owner of Green Logic Energy, of East Hampton, who installed these solar panels. He was explaining his panels to groups of people who were on the tour. He explained how they could run the electricity and heat for these two buildings, housing 35 employees at Gay Amaden Insurance. He went inside and showed us how a little "inverter" box did all the work of harnessing the power from the sun, and running the building on it.

"This agency is one of the first on the End to try solar power in a commercial building," he said. "So far, they feel they have saved money, and that it's worth the investment."

From here, we drove over to the Napeague section of Amagansett, which is an ideal setting for solar energy, with its wide, open spaces unencumbered by trees. On the way to Lazy Point, we toured the home of Neal and Eileen Klar, with its magnificent water views. The Klars were inspired to switch to solar energy when they built their home about five years ago, by their 29 year-old son.

"Our son is very concerned about the environment, and since we are in a fragile, beach-front area to begin with, he encouraged us to go as "green" as possible, using sustainable woods in the floors, recycled tiles and countertops, and using solar energy," said Eileen Klar. As guests toured their home and pool, also powered by solar energy, Neal Klar pointed to the solar panels on the rooftop. "Our panels are up high, and they're very flat, so you don't really notice them too much," he said. "They are really cost-effective so far, saving us money. We can now watch our electric meter run backwards."

Inside their lovely, two-story home, Eileen Klar pointed out the use of bamboo in the floors. "Regular trees take about 50 to 100 years to grow back after you cut them down, but bamboo grows very quickly, so this isn't as big an impact on the environment," she said. "And we have used recycled glass and concrete in our kitchen countertops and recycled glass in our bathroom floor tiles."

We left the sandy dunes of Napeague, and drove back toward the Village of East Hampton, in the nearby woods, to the custom-designed home of architect Bill Chaleff. As one of the original pioneers and promoters of solar energy and "green building," Chaleff designed and built his partly-underground, solar house in 1999.

Chaleff was not only giving tours of his modern, airy, and sunny home, complete with floor to ceiling windows, but he was also giving lectures on solar energy to small groups who gathered throughout the day in his living room. "I'm excited to see so many people who have come by and shown a serious interest in renewable energy," said Chaleff. "I think people are really looking at this as a viable alternative to fossil fuels."

Further up the road, in the hamlet of

Springs, we came to the home of another architect, Edwin Stromsten. He designed and built a magnificent, modern home filled with solar panels in a sort of geometric design, slanted toward the sun in a 90-degree angle. His home is like a triangle shape, and he saves quite a lot on his energy bills. Stromsten, a noted architect, said he also sees an increased interest in solar homes among his clients.

Also in Springs, is the solar-heated, natural wood home of Susan Carlo, an art teacher who divides her time between New York City and her home here. "My home is an example of a modest dwelling, which has been converted to solar power," she said. "It has created lots of interest, since I'm not an architect or a celebrity, but just a working class person who has chosen this for my home, to save energy and money." She said since there are many tall trees in Springs, she mostly gets sunshine in the morning, and its starts to fade later in the day. "When you build a solar home, location is important," she said. "It really should face south for the best sunlight, and not be too overshadowed by tall trees which obstruct the sun."

Gordian Raacke, Executive Director of RELI, said, "We appreciate all these homeowners opening their solar and green homes to share their cost- and energy-saving ideas with their neighbors, and we hope to do this tour again next year with even more homes." Neighbor:

By Kirk Cassels

In one corner of the party, the flashy film producer brags through his plastic smile to the attractive young girl about his next triumph, and how he still has yet to begin casting. She responds in an awkwardly inquisitive manner. Panning away from the two and scrolling across the meticulously arranged yet delightfully decorated room, two different conversations audibly butt heads as the real estate agent and her friend talk trends just a few inches away from the father who is reprimanding the little son for bad behavior. Moving from one room to another feels like a complex, yet elegant, documentary as myriad stories come out of each mouth and either conclude or intertwine with something significant by the time the night is over. Are you somewhere reminiscing an extravagant gathering in the Hamptons? Maybe, or perhaps you are watching another scene from another film by Robert Altman.

Attention movie fans — those who take in every shot as if it were a piece of evidence, and treat each word of dialogue as if it were the main theme of a sermon or perennial issue in a political debate — Altman is your director and storyteller of choice. Through a career that has now spanned six decades, Altman has received multiple Academy Award, Golden Globe and Emmy nominations for directing, producing and writing, praise from critic and audience circles of all tastes, and was this year's recipient of the Academy Award for Lifetime Achievement. A smaller, yet still special, moment for the film icon still lies just around the corner in time and place. A marquee highlight of the upcoming Hamptons International Film Festival will be "A Conversation with Robert Altman," in which the man converses with "Rolling Stone" writer Peter Travers. Unlike the trademark of most Altman films, this conversation between two people will be the only one in the frame. Altman's love for overlapping dialogue and multi-character influenced plotlines will take a back seat to the solo dialogue between him and Travers as they follow the storyline of his life in film.

Before he first stepped behind the complex world of the camera, Altman was living a simple life in Kansas City, Missouri. He was born there on February 20, 1925. After high school, he attended the Wentworth Military Academy in Lexington, Kentucky before enlisting in the Air Force and becoming a co-pilot of B-24 bombers during World War II. To this day, Altman does not appear eager to converse about the specifics of what he did during the war. He was, however, clearly eager to leave the military atmosphere for the world of Hollywood after first seeing its bright lights on a training run for the Air Force in California.

The nascent period of his film career began in 1946, when Altman made several trips into credit for it) and RKO picked up his screenplay for Bodyguard. Shortly thereafter, he accented his writing talents in New York City. The screenplays, published or not, came and went, along with several magazine articles, novels and musicals. The work was constant, but it still was not Hollywood. Altman so yearned to be a part of that enamoring world he even tried non-cinematic means. A notable attempt remains his invention of a "dog-tattooing system" called Identico. Altman creatively managed to tattoo the President's dog while Truman was still in the White House, as a publicity stunt. Shortly thereafter, however, the company went bankrupt, and Altman was forced to return home.

Kansas City may not have had the endearing panache and posh that Hollywood emanated but it still had the Calvin Company, which, at the time, was the world's largest production company and 16mm film laboratory.

Back then there was no New York Film Academy and there was no University of Southern California for Altman to attend and learn the craft of filmmaking. Using his newly discovered talent, Altman started as a film writer and worked his way up within a few months to begin directing. Over the span of six years, he directed over 60 shorts on a learn-by-film basis. It was not too long before he acquired the essential experience of filming quickly on a tight schedule and thoroughly within a set budget. In addition, he continuously honed his skills in framing the camera, setting the correct input on the boom mike, and adjusting the lights for an epic shot. He could now bring his screenplays to life on the big screen.

The storylines, cameras and lights in an Altman film traditionally revolve around a large cast — A Prairie Home Companion and Gosford Park each had over 50 characters with speaking roles. He can lead, inspire, and manage numerous actors, in addition to the production team, after decades of experience in accomplishing such a complicated feat. In 1955, he wrote and directed his first feature film, The Delinquents, in Kansas City, using local actors and actresses from the community, and members of his own family. Friends from Altman's days at the Calvin Company helped with the lights, the mikes, and the cameras. Two years later, Altman's desire to get his foot further in Hollywood's and out of Hollywood. After a brief stint in acting, he wrote or co-wrote screenplay after screenplay and pitched them to studios. With diligence and time, he mastered his craft as United Artists accepted his script for Christmas Eve (although he did not receive a keep the safety of her team in mind, as dealing with a 600-pound mother dolphin protecting a calf in the water is a potentially life-threatening situation. Durham credits the village of Sag Harbor for allowing herself and nine other staff members to rescue the dolphins in the safest possible circumstances; "we received really great support from the village," she said. "If we didn't have an ambulance standing by and the support of the police, our people would not have gotten in to the water."

By Thursday morning there was no question that the two dolphins were in great distress and needed to be saved immediately. Ariel and her mother were "inside the yacht club, swimming in tight little circles in the marina." An autopsy later revealed that the body of Ariel's mother was riddled with worms and parasites, and her brain was full of lesions. These ailments must have impaired the mother's ability to use sonar to navigate, which resulted in her swimming in circles, with little Ariel tirelessly following her mother's every stroke.

Ariel's mother died en route to the Riverhead

Foundation's Marine Hospital, but Ariel appeared to be in good health. Durham assured us on Friday that despite the stress of losing her mother at such a young age, Ariel is "eating squid, swimming well, (and) interacting with the staff and with objects." All of her medical tests have come back "very positive" and "Ariel has shown no signs of having the parasites her mother had." Although she is physically able to swim in open waters, Ariel "has been assessed as being an animal in need of permanent care" due to her young age. Bottlenose dolphin calves generally stay by their mothers' sides for three to six years, and do not reach full maturity until they are eleven or twelve years old. At one-and-a-half, Ariel is much too young to fend for herself in the wild.

The process of finding a permanent home for Ariel has already begun, and the NOAA is currently taking an inventory of every approved facility in the country in order to find a suitable place for Ariel to live. There are strict guidelines for re-homing such a young dolphin, and Ariel's new home will have to meet NOAA health and safety standards, and must also have an established population of Bottlenose dolphins to serve as Ariel's new family. Because a baby dolphin should stay close to her pod until she is at least six years old, it is imperative that Ariel's new home have a group of healthy Bottlenose dolphins to care for and socialize with little Ariel.

Until Ariel is moved to her new home, videos of Ariel's recovery process and updates on her status can be found on her webpage at the Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research and Preservation's website, www.riverheadfoundation.org.

door paid off when United Artists purchased the film and it grossed close to $1 million. 15 years later, MASH grossed over $73 million, garnered Altman his first Academy Award nomination, and solidified his name and reputation as an influential and talented filmmaker.

Over the years, several film critics and movie gurus alike have been enthralled by Altman's style — some call it "naturalistic." Others do not appreciate his style or, in fact, get frustrated by it. He does not use digital enhancements or special effects like so many filmmakers do these days, but instead harnesses his experienced love for sound, framing and the written word. Amidst the overlapping dialogue and specifically placed items on the wall, in the foreground or anywhere else in the shot, he coaxes movie fans further into the intricately complex storyline that lies ahead of them. The strength of Altman's talent and passion mixed with his history of unique achievements (many of which were accomplished independently) make him an excellent choice for honor at the Hamptons International Film Festival.

For a number of years, however, Karpov was repeatedly asked to defend his crown against a young Russian intellectual named Gary Kasparov. The reason he declined, everybody knew, was that Kasparov was not a member of the Communist Party. Furthermore he was half Jewish.

But finally Karpov relented and agreed to play Kasparov. And Karpov lost. As for Kasparov, he was so disgusted with the World Chess Federation for snubbing him for so long he withdrew his membership and, in 1985 formed a second group, with himself as champion. The other faction named their own champion.

For more than a dozen years, Kasparov remained champion. But in the mid 1990s, he seemed to be losing his powers. Finally, he was beaten by another Russian grandmaster named Vladimir Kramnik, who is one of the combatants today. Kramnik plays a kind of thoughtful, defensive chess that can lead to very complex situations. In such situations, he gets opponents to make mistakes, which is what happened to Kasparov, who, shortly after losing, retired.

In the meantime, a series of undistinguished Russian grandmasters held the title for the WCF. But three years ago, an exciting new champion captured that crown. Veselin Topalov of Bulgaria was an aggressive, accurate player whose specialty was dazzling and then overwhelming his opponent. He was favored to beat Kramnik.

Topalov went to the airport in Bulgaria headed for Elista accompanied by the President of Bulgaria. A letter of praise from the Prime Minister was read. For half a century, Bulgaria had been under the thumb of the old Soviet Union. Now, though still a largely backward nation, Bulgaria was about to join the European Union. A lot was riding on the shoulders of Topalov.

In a chess match, each player gets a point for winning a game. If they tie they each get half a point. In this match, the first to get to 6 1/2 points, would win.

The first game lived up to all expectations and was much talked about around the world. Topalov, as expected, attacked. Kramnik parried and tried to fend him off, but when he couldn't hold Topalov off entirely, he opened up an attack of his own. But it wasn't working.

After each move, both players would retire to a lounge area behind a curtain. There were two lounge areas, separate ones, for each player. And behind each lounge area, considering that the games often went on for seven hours, there were private bathrooms. To prevent cheating, surveillance cameras were in the lounge areas but none in the bathrooms. Kramnik kept going to his bathroom.

In any case, at this point back at the board, this first game took a stunning turn. Four and a half hours into the match, Kramnik made a move that opened up the possibility for him to get a draw. It was not a sure thing. But he asked Topalov if Topalov would accept a draw. Topalov declined.

Four moves later, back on the attack and with the possibilities of the draw rapidly fading for Kramnik, Topalov made a move that was a huge mistake. Ten moves later, because of this blunder, Kramnik got an immediate stranglehold on his opponent and Topalov surrendered. Kramnik 1, Topalov 0.

In the second game, Kramnik came out swinging, which was a surprise, and essentially fought Topalov even on the board. Later, analysts said that Topalov was playing the cleaner, better chess. But it never got that far. Once again, Topalov blundered and once again he had to give up. People thought that Topalov was suffering from stage fright. Kramnik 2, Topalov 0.

In the third and fourth game, Kramnik played strictly for the draw. It must have been clear to him that Topalov was better when they mixed it up. Kramnik would dance and stay away. And he'd fight for the draw and get it. He

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER.

The Road And The Yankees

On Saturday I was driving along "the stretch" coming from Montauk on my way to Bridgehampton to an art gallery exhibit at the Silas Marder art gallery, which is an amazing space by the way. I was excited to go because Silas and his brothers Mica (who is an artist) and Dash were all friends of mine in high school. It will be good to catch up with them, I thought to myself as I cruised along. I was in a good mood.

But then, out of nowhere, the mood changed when a guy in a pick-up passed me. I can't even tell you how embarrassed I was with myself when this happened. I was driving at a steady 55 miles per hour with the cruise control set and I saw this guy come right up behind me in an old Ford pick-up. He was only two feet away from my bumper and it was really making me crazy. I was refusing to speed up, mainly because I didn't want to give this guy the satisfaction for making me drive faster, but also because you never know when a radar gun will smack your car.

There he was though, the big Ford logo in my rear view mirror and the driver with an expression on his face like I was this big loser who didn't know how to drive. I thought about slowing down to a ridiculously slow speed, just to be a jerk, but I didn't. I pretended that I didn't even see him and just kept driving. Then, on a double yellow, the jerk passed me, roaring his 6 miles per gallon engine.

I was fantasizing that my car had built in machine guns that I could unleash on this truck. I watched him pull ahead and as he passed me, look down at me and shake his head. The toxic fumes of his truck entered into my nostrils and that only seemed to further my rage. I let out a very quiet, "serenity now" comment and continued to drive, and prayed that a cop would pull him over.

It is difficult to describe how low a young man such as myself feels when a person passes you on the road. You feel like less of a man. It is even worse when somebody is actually in the car with you as they pass and thinks you should be driving faster and then gives you a look. I talked to my friend Mike Aliffi, who is the boyfriend of Nicole Caruso, a friend of mine that I work with here at Dan's Papers, about the subject. Mike furrowed his brow when I asked him how he feels when somebody passes him. "I become enraged."

I don't know what it is about somebody passing you that makes you feel so low. The funny thing is that nine times out of ten you'll catch up with the guy when you get to a 30 miles per hour zone. You would think that he feels like an idiot for wasting all of that gas to just get in front of you, but he doesn't. Even at a stoplight, as long as he is in front of you, he feels like the man and to him you are weak. Life is weird.

I'm over the guy passing me on the road, but I'm still not really over the Yankees falling apart. I mean, come on! You have got to be kidding me! I don't want to harp on the subject, but almost everyone I know was in this funk as they watched the Yanks plummet into this ridiculous end-of-the-season. It only made matters worse when you picked up the newspaper on Monday to find headlines that suggested Torre should be replaced by Lou Pinella. Seems like a slap in the face to me. If anything, get rid of some of these highly paid players that just aren't making the cut. I have always thought A-Rod wasn't a team player and I never liked him. He has no mental strength whatsoever during important games. Everybody knew that Randy Johnson wasn't a Yankee and his playing this year showed his head wasn't in the right place either.

Whatever. It's behind me, it's behind us. Go Mets. Serenity now.

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages. Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find.

The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

All the 'How To' shows on TV feature clearing out your closets as part of decluttering your house. But their closets never seem to look like mine.

You know the Closet Encounter is getting closer when you drop something among the shoes on the floor of your closet. Now, as you pursue the lost item on your hands and knees, sneezing from the dust, as you memorize the locations of the spider webs, you know you absolutely MUST clean out this closet soon and rotate the summer/winter clothes.

You also have time to steel yourself for "summer shrinkage." Many sweaters and pants that fit last year shrunk in the summer closet, which exceeds 400 degrees. Now those items will have to be stored through the winter in the

We also need time to prepare for “Sparkle Shock.” I’ve never had this problem, but I know lots of gals do. Sparkle Shock is when you pull a top out of the closet that you cannot believe you wore last winter. You know, the Christmas sweater with the Rudolph nose that lights up... or the sequined giant snowflakes top...or the sweater with the glittering Alvin and the Chipmunks on the front with the words to their Christmas song on the back. You see, winter gets so dull and drab that these things look wonderful at the time so everyone wears them. And they will look good again around mid December, but that initial sparkle shock can be a doozy, so you want to be prepared. I never have this problem because all my taste is in my mouth and every winter top I have is a glitz on titz spectacular!

Prior to the Closet Encounter, we have to spend a lot of time looking in the catalogs that come to search out new things we want to buy. This “wish book” search is essential to the Closet Encounter closet cleanout because it creates motivation to throw old things away, or better yet, perfect ways to compact existing items to make way for new stuff.

Finally, the Closet Encounter is here. The kids are at school, the hubby is at work, the bed (sorting area) is cleared off and ready. You stand there facing a long row of sleeves. You pause, allowing time for a phone call to come in, any call that comes in and stops you is a sign that this task should not be done today. If it rings, you say, "Thank God you called, I'm in the closet." Without a call, you're doomed.

You are amazed at the pile of clothes on the bed! The cubic volume of the stack far exceeds the cubic volume of the closet. If it were not for expandable drywall, half this stuff couldn't be forced back into the closet.

With everything out, you vacuum, the spiders are on the run. You put some sachets on the top shelf, as recommended by the "How To" people, and begin the restuffing process. Summer stuff gets restuffed first. You throw out an average of seven items. But not to worry, this loss is counterbalanced by the eleven items you will add through the winter. And so it goes until you move into a bigger house.

At the end of the Closet Encounter, you order take out for dinner because you are entitled to a three day period of rest. You'll only get an hour of it, so dramatize and maximize while you can. I like to lay on the couch drooling, with glazed eyes, and a few stray sequins stuck to my cheeks for that special touch. My children bring me shrimp and cocktail sauce which helps my recovery from yet another Closet Encounter.

could, if he played it right, draw his way right to victory. Boring, yes. But victory nevertheless. Topalov, desperate, found himself unable to engage Kramnik. Sometimes he would even offer Kramnik a sacrifice of a pawn or a horse to draw him out, but Kramnik would decline. Kramnik 3, Topalov 1.

The next day was a rest day. There would be no game. But late that morning, Veselin Topalov's manager held a press conference to read aloud a letter he had written to the Organizing Committee for the event. Essentially, the letter accused Kramnik of cheating. It said that the surveillance tapes in the lounges showed that during the course of the matches, Kramnik had visited the bathroom no less than 50 times. He showed the tapes. There were no surveillance cameras in the bathrooms. Topalov's manager demanded that the private bathrooms be locked. If either player wanted to use the bathroom, there were public bathrooms. The manager also demanded that surveillance cameras be installed in the public bathrooms. And if that could not be done, then a member of the committee should accompany Kramnik on his bathroom breaks.

This press conference caused a sensation. Fifty times? Kramnik was asked about it. He said he liked to pace when he played chess. And there was not enough room to pace in the lounge. He paced in the bathroom. Kramnik's manager said the organizing committee had no business giving Topalov private surveillance tapes of Kramnik.

The committee's response, after discussions with both parties, was to lock the two private bathrooms. But they also said they would neither install cameras nor accompany anybody into the public bathrooms. It seems they thought this was a compromise.

The next day, the fifth game, was scheduled to begin at 10 a.m. At 9:30, Topalov appeared and sat at the table. At 9:45, Kramnik appeared and sat on a chair in front of his locked bathroom and said he was waiting for it to be opened. At 10, the match was officially started. And at 10:15, with Kramnik still protesting at the locked bathroom door, Topalov was declared the winner by forfeit. Kramnik 3, Topalov 2.

The committee declared a recess for the next day, postponing game six. They had received a letter from Kramnik himself. He said that he was not going to be part of a reality show. He said that the rules stated that once a match starts you can't modify the rules without the approval of both parties and he was not agreeing to give up his private bathroom. And he said that therefore the decision to lock the bathroom doors was illegal and there should be no forfeit. By the end of that next day, which was a Friday, the committee postponed the next game until Monday.

At this point, there was a belief that the entire match was about to collapse without a winner. Topalov said that if the match continued with the bathroom open, he would play but he would not shake Kramnik's hand. And so forth and so on.

Eventually, over the weekend, with two million dollars and the desires of millions of chess fans around the world to see the title re-united, a compromise was reached to allow the games to continue. The private bathrooms would remain open during the match and there would be no surveillance cameras or secret service spy to go in with either of the chess players, but immediately after a game the bathrooms would be searched by experts and then sealed. They would unsealed and searched again just before the next game. As for the forfeit, it would be allowed to stand. The committee, though, would be fired, and a new committee named to take their place. Here is a sentence explaining why the forfeit stood.

"We should like to point out," they wrote to Kramnik, "that the appointment of the new Committee does not mean the new one has the power to overrule any decisions taken by the former Committee which are absolutely final."

Kramnik might have gone home at that point. But he didn't. He did say he was very angry, but he said he felt the chess world was entitled to a champion, and he would play on under protest. Incidentally, over the weekend, a group of fourteen chess grandmasters signed their names to a letter declaring that Kramnik was to them a hero. And they wished him the best in winning the rest of the match, which they said would certainly be difficult for him to do under these circumstances.

Then somebody remembered 1963. At that time, the manager of the champion Tigran Petrosian would get him, just before a game, a cup of yogurt. The challenger said that he always got blueberry. But one time the champion's manager gave him chocolate. Saying he thought this was a signal of some kind, the challenger demanded that the committee order the manager to tell them the DAY BEFORE which flavor it was going to be. The committee ruled that the manager didn't have to tell them anything, UNLESS the cup of yogurt would be something other than blueberry. And then they needed to be told.

At this writing, the games continue. Topalov has in these recent games begun dominating Kramnik and has now taken the lead. He is three games from winning. Furthermore, Topalov has tightened the screws by playing speed chess to keep Kramnik from his bathroom walks. All hail Bulgaria. Tune in next week.

As far as Hampton television viewers go, you don't need to worry. The company is still very much in business. The only change might be that prices go up for the service Cablevision provides in order to pay for the purchase of the company, including the more expensive cost of the loans to leverage the buyout and the more expensive ongoing banking costs to proceed. In fact, you just might want to send them a little extra on your next bill in anticipation of this.

The music, basketball, hockey and boxing fans of the Hamptons also don't need to worry about

Madison Square Garden in this deal. The Garden, in a fantastic proposal by others that will be highly beneficial for the Dolans, is expected to be replaced with a brand new arena one block west from its current location to Ninth Avenue in New York City as part of the James A. Farley Post Office renovation. This will create an entirely new multi billion-dollar gateway to New York City. Cablevision has signed a memorandum of understanding that they will do this as part of the deal if the price is right.

And don't worry, the new Madison Square Garden will be up and running before the old one gets torn down so none of the shows and event times will be affected.

According to the Dolans, going private will give them the flexibility they need to compete in the future in the volatile communications market. But others say the change may be a signal that Cablevision will be put up for sale. Other companies such as Time Warner, a regional competitor, might be interested.

were replaced to read "Stony Brook Southampton" was also not lost on the happy group of well wishers. The members of the SAVE group, who were so vocal and active in helping sway public opinion and helped move the sale forward, were also individually thanked by Dr. Kenny as was their President Harry Marmion. The Southampton College Alumni Association President was also singled out for special thanks.

Carol Gilbert the former director of Alumni Relations at Southampton College sported a hand written T-Shirt that thanked SUNY for saving the college and presented Dr. Kenny with a bouquet of flowers.

Dr. Donald Baker, one of the first teachers hired at Southampton College when it opened who now teaches at LIU's CW Post campus said, "It is not the end but a new beginning," with an enormous grin on his face. His remarks were echoed by Robert Reeves, who formerly headed the famous MFA creative writing program at Southampton and will now head it at Stony Brook Southampton. "It's a wonderful day for the East End and for our writing programs that will flourish here and create for the east end the kind of activity it deserves."

It was heartwarming to see the unbridled enthusiasm on all the faces of everyone present when the blue ceremonial hammers came out and the signs went up all over the campus and the front gate of the college was shorn of its Long Island University label.

It is over, the war is won and everyone involved can now get on with the task of making a new, better, and more responsive college. Stony Brook has shown enormous sensitivity towards the community, former faculty, alumni and the town's people. New students will come to the campus and bring with them the missing vitality and spirit that cast a pall over the entire east ends community the last two years. Dr. Kenny, referring to Stony Brook

Southampton's planned curriculum, stated "environment and sustainability are the most critical issues for the 21st century, and Stony Brook Southampton will offer an extraordinary opportunity for students to help shape our response to the global challenges we face, especially here on the east end of Long Island."

Dr. Kenny reiterated her invitation to everyone to come to the big "Blast" on the campus on Oct 14th from 11 to 2 p.m. She wants everyone to join her at the picnic with food, wine and music on the great lawn behind Chancellors Hall. A real Texas style welcome to the East End community

Someone once said that a "that a leopard never changes its spots." So Long Island University right to the end was annoying, venial and divisive. After two years of procrastination and threatening to "sell the 110 acre campus for the highest financial return and best possible usage. "LIU finally signed off on their March agreement with Stony Brook University this past week. The Southampton Campus (turns out it was only 82 acres) and all its buildings were part of the Oct 3rd contentious closing where the seller (LIU) failed to present a "broom clean" campus as per agreement but agreed to clean it up after the transfer of funds, $35 million into their coffers. Some of the funds were held in escrow to ensure LIU's performance. Rather than donate the mountains of desks, chairs, tables, filling cabinets, pianos, beds, telephones, assorted office machines, and cartoons of books, LIU simply dumped them on the lawns outside the various buildings for pick up by a caravan of trucks they had to hire to clean up the campus. Along with the mountain of provocative materials were boxes of private financial aid records that contained social security numbers, names, addresses and historical data of students who had applied for aid over the 40-year history of Southampton College. No attempt seems to have been made to safeguard this information or to destroy it. In addition the interior of most of the buildings was simply filthy. Dan Rattiner the publisher of Dan's Paper's, summed it up best when he noted that the campus looked like "a place where an unwanted tenant had finally been evicted and all their crap was out on the street."

Such trucks are being used in, among other places, California, Massachusetts, and Oklahoma, and every day, twice a day, changing the one way direction of a particular lane on the Tappan Zee Bridge crossing the Hudson River in upstate New York. Here's a picture of the truck.

The last thing to think about with all this is something sad that I have to report. Every day, more people move to the Hamptons, more people get employed to work in the Hamptons and more people have to use the roads to get to the Hamptons.

The cone system works. The cars speed through. They even pass the devil-may-care SPEED LIMITS ENFORCED sign that is now up. But that is today. Tomorrow and the day after tomorrow are another matter. There will be more people and more cars on this single main artery leading into the Hamptons, and the truth be told, we do not have any more lanes to mess with here on the Levy Hell Highway.

art review: plein air

By Sabrina C. Mashburn

In the early 19th Century, a group of French painters led by Claude Monet and Edouard Manet, moved from the hustle and bustle of Paris to the sun-dappled countryside. Frustrated with their inability to capture the soft golden light's effect from memory, they slung their easels across their backs, put their paints in their pockets, and began to paint "en plein air," capturing the light they loved and revolutionizing art in the process.

Eighty years later, another group of artists, led by Jackson Pollock and Willem de Kooning, were similarly constricted by city life, and ventured out into the then-rural landscape of Long Island; and although these Abstract Expressionists stayed in their studios, the beautiful landscapes and honest living of Long Island helped them to create some of the best works of their careers.

The winemakers on the East End often refer to our climate as Bordeaux-like, and artists who live and work here will tell you that the light and landscape here is some of the purest and most beautiful in the world. However, in the past twenty years, so much of the exquisite farmland and marshland has been filled in and developed that these beautiful landscapes are being lost forever.

The Peconic Land Trust is trying to stop it. And, calling upon the genius of artists to reveal the perfection in the light of the East End, just as the Hudson River School did for the Hudson River Valley, and the Impressionists did for the French Countryside, the Peconic Land Trust opened twenty-two of its most beautiful private and protected lands for a hardy troupe of Plein Air artists to paint, and thus save, them.

The resulting exhibit, which was presented at Ashwagh Hall last week, was hung in the French salon style, with little gold-framed canvasses cluttering the walls, and lovely paintings and photographs covering every inch of space. And though all of the paintings were lovely, perhaps due to their subject, many were surprisingly good. Although some of the paintings were created on the tops of cars, and in artists' hands, sans easel, in under an hour before the light faded, they are precisely painted and capture not only the look, but the feeling, of some of the East End's wildest wetlands and verdant farms.

In keeping with the tradition of the Plein Air artists, many of the painters ventured out together, painting the same scene from different perspectives, and learning together how to capture the elusive colors of the East End. Although many of the artists in the exhibit had painted "en plein air" before, they had never gone out together, and the artists themselves remarked how much more beautiful their work had become through the collaborative process. Casey Anderson explained that looking at another artist's painting of the same subject "shows you how to see" the scene from their perspective. For the exhibition's viewers, these magnificent places truly came to life when viewed from more than one artist's perspective, and at different times of day. Just as Monet's haystacks materialize, not as combinations of colors, but as real objects, when the entire series is viewed, the little red barn with a yard full of sheep seems more familiar with each artist's picture.

Some of the most remarkable canvasses were produced by Aubrey Grainger; Grainger's work captures the moment of exhale at the closing of a long day at a working East End Farm, treating these farmscapes as delicately and attentively as Monet treated his haystacks. However, Grainger's oeuvre is not limited to the farm, and View from Scallop Pond is an equally perfect depiction of a Hamptons home nestled neatly into a clump of trees on a waterfront. Casey Anderson is also a master of landscape, and her Bright Dune and Farming by The Sea pictures showcase the East End as we all dream about it, on a bright, hot summer day with a gentle ocean breeze. Susan D'Alessio's work captures yet another mood of our ever-changing climate, with wind whipping over Fowler Farm and blackening skies hovering above the tree line over the Gatherers at Quail Hill.

The photographers highlighted the vitality of their medium by choosing avant-garde angles and dramatic textures, thus distinguishing their work as a fresh, new view of Long Island. The most striking photographs were taken by Katherine Szoka, whose modern pictures of historic landscapes highlighted the notion that, although the history of the land must be preserved, our landscape will always be changing, living and growing.

Although art cannot save the world, the artists who participated in this show are trying to save a small piece of it, so that future generations can experience the East End's beauty themselves, and perhaps create art of their own. Some of these artists have participated in shows with similar aims, such as Ashwagh Hall's August show to benefit the Nature Conservancy, but most of them had never had the opportunity to paint on pristine, protected land before. Painter Susan D'Alessio remarked that "being able to see some of these sights was so spectacular; this became new vistas for all of us. It just broadened our horizons." Not only has this experience brought these lands to the public's attention, but the artists who painted them have all been influenced by the East End's inspirational natural beauty. Joanne Rosco explained that "working for the preservation of land has become very important to all of us."

Those of us who are not artists can work towards preserving what is left of Long Island's farms and wetlands by supporting the Peconic Land Trust, either by buying a painting, calling (631) 283-3195 or visiting www.PeconicLandTrust.org to learn more about how to save our delicate ecosystems before they are gone.

Chance Of A Ghost In Mattituck

The Old Mill Inn Is Investigated By Paranormal Experts. Well...Sort Of.

By Scott Teel

While the rest of us were in the bar, hoping to catch a glimpse of a ghost at The Old Mill Inn in Mattituck, Brian and Bryan were sniffing around the restaurant area with a voice recorder and a digital thermometer.

"You know why the ghost likes the bar area?" Brian said to Bryan. "Because of the BOOOO-ze. Get it?"

"Another joke that bad - you'll be the one haunting the place," Bryan told him.

We had come in at closing time with four night-vision cameras, two voice recorders, a digital thermometer, an electromagnetic field detector, still cameras, and a hankering to catch evidence of Jan Holmes, former owner of The Old Mill Inn, who is reputed to hang around, occasionally hurling the heavy ice scoop across the bar or grabbing a gentleman's leg. That may not sound like much more than a personality disorder, but Jan deserves kudos for pulling those things off since she's been diagnosed as what doctors call "dead" for 30-plus years.

Who are we? Why, we're the Long Island Paranormal Society, or LIPS (catchy, eh? Fine, go ahead and laugh, then) and we're here to hunt ghosts. After all, Halloween is just around the corner.

Paranormal activity has been reported at The Old Mill Inn restaurant in Mattituck for decades, by dozens. Okay, by like two people. Once the stereo burst on by itself (at least once when the building's power had been cut), diners have seen a specials board slide two feet on its own, the door to the pantry opens and closes itself and the list goes on.

The Old Mill Inn is old (that, you see, is why it's not called "The Relatively New Mill Inn"). It's a great place to go. Built in 1821 as a grist mill, it was changed into a tavern around 1900, and expanded to a restaurant in the fifties. From early on in its tavern-era, patrons of the Old Mill Inn would scrawl their names on the thick beams of the building, along with the year (try that in your local Starbucks today). In fact, you can still read names on the beams from the last century, including that of Jan Holmes herself.

So the LIPS team, taking our cue from popular ghost hunters like The Atlantic Paranormal Society, went in to see if we could debunk the claims.

None of us could have predicted beforehand that we would be the first to definitively prove the existence of the afterlife that night.

Which was fine, because we didn't.

Did I mention this was the LIPS team's first ghost hunt? Rob and I had hunted one building in 2001, but for Matt, Brian, Bryan, Greg, and Karen, it was a first. We gave the impression of a seasoned specter-searching team because I had gotten us all matching tees. "NO BODY? NO PROBLEM!" they read on the front, with "LIPS" on the back. Yeah...you couldn't look any cooler than we.

We'd been given a tour by Bia and Barbara, two of the restaurant's friendly co-owners, and after I had set up one night-vision camera in the bar and one in the ladies room (where no man had "gone" before, ha ha), we went dark and got down to the matters at hand:

Check for temperature fluctuations or cold spots. Much like myself at a party, "entities" are said to suck energy from the area around them, which can drop the temperature in that area. Check for electromagnetic field spikes. Since a "ghost" is supposedly all energy, increases in EMF readings that can't be explained could be a phantom in the room. Try to pick up EVP (electronic voice phenomena). This mega-creepiest of theories suggests that if you record in a "haunted" locale, sometimes when you play back the audio at high volume, you can hear "ghosts" talking on the recording that you did not hear while recording. You can listen to thousands of examples on the Internet. We'll take photos and night-vision video.

In hindsight, we learned a lot of dos and do-nots during the evening. We were sweating slightly and had left the door open earlier for cooler air, which allowed several flying insects to join us.

Next time we also may not want to bring seven people to a hunt of two rooms, since with all the people walking around, talking, bumping things in the pitch black, shining lights around, cursing, sitting on impossibly creaky chairs, any noises captured on the voice recorders must be discounted as us. No one could wait outside because it was raining.

The only odd things we caught were a small "click" in the bathroom (no biggie), one suspicious EMF spike that couldn't be identified as normal, and a few orb photos, which could just be dust. Matt also took extended close-up footage of a small sailor carving on the wall, claiming he thought he saw the eyes move. This was at 2:20 a.m., I should note.

So can we say The Old Mill Inn is truly haunted? No. We found nothing that could be used as evidence, but, since our own learning curve kind of ruined the data, a haunting can't be ruled out, especially when one considers the variety of experiences reported by so many people over the years. It also might have just been a quiet paranormal night.

We had put out a glass of Dewers, Jan Holmes' favorite drink, in hopes of attracting her attention. Later, when Rob looked in the glass with his flashlight, I asked if there was anything interesting.

"Two of the fruit flies we let in earlier drowned in there," he replied.

Only time will tell if their tiny ghosts will haunt that glass.

Dan's North Fork

A True North Forker

Jim Dreeben Of Peconic Paddler Is Closing Shop, But Will Always Paddle

By TJ Clemente

Kayaks are amazing. They are a sure way to get in touch with nature. Usually paddling in almost complete silence along the water you paddle and observe the eco system around you. Swans charge at you sometimes, fish jump all around. For over 40 years Peconic Paddlers of Riverhead have been servicing the North fork with many kayak needs from selling them, repairing them, renting them, and organizing wonderful kayak trips. However after 40 years of operations, Jim Dreeben is looking to end Peconic Paddlers. At the moment there are wonderful deals as Jim lets go of his inventory at nice discounted prices.

Jim Dreeben grew up in Merrick, Long Island. After service time driving "trucks all over Germany," Jim operated a Sinclair station across from his present location. When the present site became available, Jim first opened a canoe rental and sales business. Jim first rode in a canoe at the age of 12 at Camp Wauwepex in Wading River. It was a sort of canoe without a paddle experience for the young Boy Scout. He was rescued, and it was in January. In 1985 Jim expanded to kayaks and the rest is kayak history.

When asked about kayak adventures, he gives mention to the Florida Keys and everglades. He also enjoyed kayaking Central America, mainly Belize and Honduras. But he just loved his Bahamas experience, living on a 90-foot catamaran and kayaking all over and around Bimini and Exhumas. He has seen alligators, dolphins, and so many types of birds he can't even guess at the number.

His most exotic trip was the Exhumas and the excursion that was his most difficult was a paddle from Orient point to Riverhead that took seven and a half hours of paddling.

Jim also helps out on the cross Hudson swims for charity. This year he also helped guide a swim across the Long Island sound for charity. While on the Hudson, Jim rescued some capsized kayakers who were in over their head. Which is why Jim gives instructions, and lessons besides organizing trips. For instructions and perhaps even lessons and tips try just calling 631-369-9500 or emailing info@peconicpaddlers.com. He also has a great website www.peconicpaddlers.com.

So what's next for this 66-year-old cannonball of energy who looks to be in his forties? He plans to take lots of paddling adventure trips and take some folks along with him. Jim Dreeben is thinking fun and action and to achieve this he plans to have an adventure type venture. Contact him at the above numbers if you'RE interested.

I have done some kayaking on the Long island Sound myself. Gliding about in early January one winter, the weather turned spring like and the sound was like glass. At that time of year the light is intense and the vast emptiness made the trip bizarre. Occasionally, huge construction barges passed by, other than that it was me alone in the middle of the Long Island Sound. If I capsized, I am sure I would have lasted perhaps an hour out there before hypothermia would have captured me. I should have had some instruction from Jim.

The North fork has had many personalities over the last forty years and without a doubt Jim has been one of them. To see him on the Peconic River in a kayak is to see him in his element. He has helped thousands buy, rent and paddle kayaks and canoes. His life has been one of sharing the wonderment of the environment while also running a business. At sixty-six years young he intends to build on his experiences and take a few people along for the pleasure ride of their lives. So get yourself over to Peconic Paddlers at 89 Peconic Avenue in Riverhead right along the Peconic River and check out the deals the steals and the stories Jim Dreeben will have for you when you get there. Tell him you read about him in Dan's North Fork.

North Fork Farmers Know The Importance Of A Good Breakfast

By Phyllis Lombardi

Eat your breakfast. That's what everybody tells you – your mom, your teachers, your doctors, and all those magazine articles about how to live to 120 on whole grains.

Well, a few breakfasts ago, I set out to find some great breakfasts on the North fork.

Let's have Dan's Papers set the record straight. And not by listing North Fork restaurants where fine breakfasts are served every day. No, we're gonna check out what used to be called "farmer-style" breakfasts. How? By checking with North Fork farmers, of course. What do they eat, at home, for breakfast? Look – the sun's just coming up. Let's go knock on a few farmhouse doors.

There, dressed and ready to go at 6 a.m., is Mike Konarski who farms in Cutchogue. He's the Mike of Farmer Mike's stand on Main Road in Cutchogue. The farmstand sign reads tomatoes, cukes, carrots, eggplants, potatoes – all that good stuff. But what it doesn't tell you is that Mike and his wife Dorothy and their children have farmed this land for 35 years. That's more than 12,000 breakfasts.

Dorothy put it best. "We're breakfast people," she said as she described her husband's first meal of the day. Mike, it seems, starts off with fruit juice and a bowl of cold cereal. (He likes Cheerios.) This is followed by yogurt and then eggs and sausage on a bagel. With coffee, of course.

Dorothy added that Mike had been seriously ill a few years ago and at that time became a firm believer in the benefits of a good breakfast. Mike is feeling fine now and spends his days providing North Forkers with good eating, good health.

Travel further east on Main Road and stop at Barb's Veggies in Peconic. Here's another husband/wife team assisted by family members. Barb and Joe Pelis live in Riverhead but farm in Aquebogue (corn) and Peconic (all the other glorious vegetables). Today working at the farm stand with Barb and Joe, is their daughter Debbie, and their grandson Robbie, a second-grader at Aquebogue School.

Barb, when I talked with her, was on her hands and knees, not with vegetables this time, but with a cluster of chrysanthemums arranged in a rock-circled garden she'd dug alongside the farm stand. And when she isn't with vegetables and flowers? Try Riverhead High School where Barb works in food service during the school year.

Oh yes, breakfast! Up before 6 a.m., these folks eat home fries, eggs, ham or bacon, rye toast and coffee. Barb cooks, of course. But Joe does, too, especially in their relatively new (six years) venture. That's Joe and Barbara's Homestyle Backyard Catering and BBQ. They come to your back yard, do the cooking. You do the eating.

How do they manage all this? Must be the breakfasts. An "out-east" farmer on the North Fork? Stop at Latham Farms in Orient. With a picture-perfect background of Shelter Island across the water, the stand is manned this morning by Peter Sanchez who also works the fields.

Peter, who's been at Latham's for more than eight years, is a slim young guy. Probably, I thought, he didn't have more than a quick cup of coffee for breakfast. But I was wrong. On the North Fork, farmer-breakfast traditions prevail.

He's up at 5 a.m. and, says Peter, does some serious eating. Ham, scrambled or fried eggs, always a bacon, lettuce and tomato sandwich. A big glass of orange juice. And then, just to be sure he'll not be mid-morning hungry, Peter enjoys a cup or two of hot chocolate and a big hunk of cake, preferably pound cake. Peter says, "We have to maintain ourselves." He does.

This breakfast, I add, is prepared by Peter's wife Angela. Their two-year-old daughter Arazay is usually asleep while Daddy eats breakfast. She does, however, visit her father when he's working at the stand. I don't know if Arazay is a big eater like her father. But she is every bit as charming, though not old enough to be an enthusiastic Yankee fan like her dad. Even after Detroit.

Well, there it is. A look at what keeps North Fork farmers, and the rest of us, going through the long mornings. We're a well-fed lot, I'd say. But listen. Isn't that the noon whistle from the firehouse? Clear as can be. So we'll have to stop right here. It's time for lunch.

Taste the 2001 Lenz Old Vines Cabernet Sauvignon!

You've heard all about blind-tasting Lenz Merlot and Château Pétrus. But there's more to Lenz than merlot. In the same blind tasting*, Lenz Old Vines Cabernet Sauvignon was tasted against the fabled Bordeaux, Château Latour. Here's how the 2001 vintages compared. Hmmm!

Soh-Muhl-YAY

A "Wine Waiter" Demystifies His Profession And Reminisces About The Good Life And Jon Bon Jovi's "Nose"

By Christopher Miller

During the high-flying, big-spending days of the late 1990s, I was a sommelier at the '21' Club in Manhattan. As you can imagine, there were many memorable experiences during my tenure, including high-fives from Matt Dillon for choosing such a fine wine for him, and being told by Jon Bon Jovi that "of course" I must be an excellent sommelier, just "look at the size of your nose."

I recall the firing of MTV executives who overspent on wines. And there was the $19,000 dinner bill for seven gentlemen paid mostly in cash, $14,000 of which was for the wines I chose for them. I was there to serve wine when CitiCorp bought Travelers, and when AOL joined Time Warner. I was even there when Colin Powell and several other GOP dignitaries joked about Bob Dole and his Viagra commercials while waiting for him to show for dinner. It was a wonderful life, a great adventure and the most economical way to taste some of the greatest wines in the world.

The term "sommelier," pronounced soh-muhl-YAY, goes back to the heady days when royalty truly ran Europe, and comes from the Old French term for a provisions manager, or sommerier. During that era the sommelier would have the keys to the wine cellar, manage the cellar and serve the wines. As the royal class shrank, the role of the sommelier was absorbed into restaurants.

Even though the Court of Master Sommeliers was established in London in 1977 and in the United States in 1986, sommeliers did not receive much attention in the American restaurant and wine scene until the early 1990s. But prior to that, in 1953, the Sommelier Society of America was established by "wine waiters" from the '21' Club. It seems that the wine waiters felt they were treated with less respect than other waiters, so they began the society as a support group.

Of course, things are quite different today. A sommelier position is highly coveted and respected, especially at a restaurant with a major wine list. There are also positions for good sommeliers in fine wine stores.

But what does that funny looking waitperson

Tools of the trade

But what does that funny looking waitperson wearing the "ashtray" do, anyway? No, his job isn't to make you feel like an ass for choosing an inexpensive wine.....

wearing the "ashtray," or Tastevin (used for discreetly tasting a wine prior to serving) do, anyway? No, his job isn't to make you feel like an ass for choosing an inexpensive wine, though some sommeliers certainly are capable of doing that with amazing ease. Depending on the size and scope of the restaurant and wine list, a sommelier can be the buyer, cellar steward and wine waiter (floor sommelier) all at once, or be any combination of wine waiter and the other two functions. All these functions are very important to the dining experience for the customer, but today the defining function of a sommelier is on the dining room floor.

A major issue for today's sommeliers is who pays them, and how they make their money. Some restaurants pay the sommelier by a percent of the wine sales, other restaurants pay a fixed salary, or shift pay. Either way, the pay will affect how a sommelier treats a dinner guest. During the roaring days of the late 1990s, I was paid an hourly wage plus 5 percent of all my wine sales. It was a great time to be a sommelier in a venerable restaurant with such terms (remember that $14,000 wine tab – do the math).

Unfortunately, the sommelier's lifestyle is not terribly family friendly, with the late nights, weekends and all that goes with restaurant life. So today I am a wine education consultant. In training future sommeliers, I try to impress upon them the importance of wine knowledge and tasting ability. But by far the most important thing I teach them is to have some humility. There is nothing that frightens a consumer more than a sommelier with a big mouth intent on proving to everyone how much he or she knows about wine. One of the most important lessons I learned while working at '21' is that when a guest is sold the correct wine for his or her budget and palate, they drink more (two bottles instead of one), tip more, and everyone is happy, this last not being the least of the goals.

My life, though it still happily revolves around wine, is a little less stressful now than when I was stopped by the Israeli Secret Service for pulling a knife as I walked into the dining room to open and pour the Prime Minister's wine (after they discovered the knife was attached to a corkscrew the Secret Service allowed me to continue my job). But I was there when Bill Cosby and Allan King launched into impromptu routines during a celebration lunch. How many people can put that on their resumes?

Chris Miller conducts a wine course for the Sommelier Society of America here on Long Island that many local wine professionals have attended. The course is twenty weeks long with a written and blind tasting exam. About 50 percent of the students pass the exam and receive a Certificate from the Sommelier Society of America, but even those who do not pass achieve a high level of wine knowledge. Letter From Dan's Wine Guide Editor: Comments, Please

Those of you who follow this section of Dan's Papers will remember from our last issue (September 1) that I reported on the results of our Second Annual Great Bordeaux-Style Wine Tasting, in which about a dozen participants blind-tasted and rated thirteen wines – six from the world's greatest wine regions, primarily France, and seven from Long Island. The local red blends did extremely well again this year, with winemaker/proprietor Roman Roth's 2002 Grapes of Roth coming in second in the Merlot-based category (Right Bank) behind Bordeaux's 2001 Chateau Pavie and Paumanok's 2002 Assemblage rounding an impressive third, easily besting the venerable La Mission Haut-Brion, rated a perfect 100 by Robert Parker.

In the Cab-based category (Left Bank), the winning 2002 Cardinale from California had both chef Matt Murphy and myself believing it was a First Growth, while Paumanok's 2002 GV Cabernet took second and the Lenz 2001 "Old Vines" Cab captured third. The shocker was the 2001 Chateau Margaux: a very disappointing last place.

But as I wrote before, "winning," or beating the others in terms of ratings, tells only part of the story, and not necessarily the most interesting part. The most telling assessments are individual comments, and following are the highlights.

"A great food wine," wrote Greenporter Hotel proprietor Deborah Rivera of the Lenz 2000 "Old Vines" Merlot. "Dark fruit forward," she said of the Jamesport 2002 Melange de Trois. "French?" she hazarded. "Either a great Long Island or French in the Bordeaux style," commented Rivera about Grapes of Roth. Answer: a great Long Island. "Elegant, complex, long finish," wrote Shelter Island resident/Corcoran broker Lisa Gilpin, recognizing the great qualities of the esteemed Chateau Pavie. "Lively, reductive, nice tannins and structure, round and soft," was Lenz winemaker Eric Fry's praise for fellow winemaker Roth's Shinn Estate

2004 Nine Barrels Reserve Merlot. "Good forward fruit, nice finish," Fry wrote about his own 2001 Lenz Cabernet, not knowing it was his. "Great tannins, elegant fruit," wrote Roman Roth about Jamesport's Melange. "Very elegant, long finish," wrote Dushy Roth, Roman's wife, about the '02 Paumanok Assemblage. "New World," she commented innocently but correctly about her husband's impressive Grapes of Roth.

And it is a new world indeed for Long Island wines. This tasting provided just one more example, as did Robert Parker's Wine Advocate's presence here in the beginning of this year, that, yes, Long Island wines are now on stage in the theater of the truly great wines of the world. Cheers.

Dan's THROUGH THE GR^{PE}VINE

By Roy Bradbrook

I still remember lunch a few years ago at a "top" French restaurant on the East End where, in response to my query about the provenance of the red wine they offered by the glass, the superbly haughty headwaiter superciliously replied, "French." Period. Not surprisingly, we have never been back since. When writing restaurant reviews, I have often commented about how I firmly believe you can judge the quality of the food once you have simply sampled the breadbasket and the soup. I now add to that checklist the selection, quality and pricing of the wines on offer by the glass.

We tested that by-the-glass theory recently in the luxurious surroundings of the Captain's Cellar in the

"A Winery to Watch!"*

In the June issue of Robert Parker's Wine Advocate, Jamesport Vineyards was reviewed as a "Winery to watch!"* by David Schildknecht, Mr. Parker's tasting associate.

The Wine Advocate is generally recognized as the most prestigious and powerful wine publication in the world, using a rating system that is known to be used by wineries around the world to help determine pricing, based on tasting notes and scores from this respected and knowledgeable publication.

Here at Jamesport Vineyards, this was an acknowledgement of what we already knew: that finally the quality and price of our wines is as good and fair as any other fine wine growing region in the world. Mr. Parker's review confirms this and certainly adds credibility and legitimacy to our appellation, the North Fork of Long Island, our backyard.

We received some of the following quotes:

Jamesport Vineyards Reserve Merlots {98' and 01'} "Puts one in mind of some serious Right Bank Chateaux"-91 and 89 pts. respectively.

02" Estate Merlot- "This excellent value wine will embarrass most of the merlots in the marketplace, both for price and quality"-88 pts.

02' Melange de Trois- "Don't miss this exceptional value for an affordable opportunity to glimpse the unique potential of L.I. red wine"-90 pts.

05' Sauvignon Blanc- "Represents an excellent value"-88 pts.

04' East End Series Chardonnay- "Vivacious, lip smacking finish of the sort to seldom associated with the C- word" "Good Value"-85 pts.

04' Late Harvest Riesling {dessert wine} "Fascinating and delicious, represents an extraordinary value!" -90 pts.

The Wine Advocate finished it's excellent and exciting review of our wines and winery by saying that, "This team may just be hitting its' stride" and, exclusively, "This is a winery to watch!"

The "Team" here at Jamesport Vineyards hopes that all wine lovers will try our wines by visiting us here at the vineyard or purchasing a bottle or two at their favorite fine wine shop or restaurant.

Paumanok Vineyards on the North Fork. Pam, who also arranges special events, has a long, local background with wine having worked closely for years with Robert and Jackie Entenmann at Martha Clara in Mattituck.

To better appreciate the selection of wines by the glass, we tasted dishes from the menu available in the Cellar, and asked Pam to choose complementary wines. Here are the delicious results.

Tuna tartare was fresh and slightly citrusy. Osprey Dominion's Vin Gris, a rosé made from Cabernet grapes, started us off very well. This is a wonderful rosé for those who normally find this type of wine rather insipid. With what is "modestly" described as "The world's greatest lobster roll" - and it does rank high on that list - Tom's Chardonnay was a perfect match. The Chard has just enough oak to make the overall tropical fruit tastes even more deep and interesting without being either rough or buttery, as many Californian Chards can be. The goat cheese tart was a superb, appetite-inducing amalgam of flaky pastry with a filling of mushrooms, cheese and tomatoes. Pam's pairing of a Jamesport Sauvignon Blanc, with a very clean grapefruit and gooseberry palate and well-balanced upfront acidity, stood up well to the pungency of the tart. This would also be a great wine to drink on its own.

To accompany a penne dish and its simple sauce of tomato, basil, garlic and Parmesan cheese, we drank Macari's Cabernet Franc, a light red wine that is coming much more into favor as a single varietal here on Long Island these days. This wine, like all Macari wines, was very true to type and shows that this varietal, with its early ripening tendency, may well be an increasing force in local vineyards. Hanger steak deserved something extra special, and Lenz 2001 "Old Vines" Cabernet filled the bill superbly with its depths of berries and long taste on the palate, bringing out the full flavors of the meat.

The wines we sampled are priced from $7 to $16 and when you consider that the normal pour here is four glasses to the bottle, this is very responsible pricing. The same can be said for the main wine list where Long Island wines account for about 20 percent with the rest coming from literally all over the wine world. California, Oregon, New Mexico, Spain, Italy, Austria, France and South Africa are all represented, and again prices start from a very reasonable $25 a bottle.

So don't be put off by second-rate, anonymous wine when a glass is all you need. Jedediah's shows that any restaurant that cares will ensure that, whether it by the glass or by the bottle, every wine will match the high quality of the food they serve.

Harvest 2006

Here's Hoping For Little Rain, A Bit Of Wind, Many Warm Days, And Lots Of Cool Nights

By Lenn Thompson

Last year's grape harvest was remarkable both for the hot, dry conditions that lasted all summer long and the almost twenty inches of rain that was dumped on the East End over eight days right in the middle of harvest. White grapes were largely unaffected because they had already been picked, but many of the Island's red grapes weren't so lucky.

That rain completely decimated some producers to the point where they didn't make red wines last year at all. Others escaped mostly unscathed and have made some tremendous wines. There will be less 2005 red wine on shelves once they start being released in the next few years, but based on barrel samples, the quality is high.

But that was last year. How is the 2006 vintage shaping up?

Getting straight answers on the topic of vintage quality from winemakers and vineyard managers can be a challenge. For obvious economic reasons, few are willing to admit that their grapes are anything but pristine. They need to sell their wine regardless and don't want bad press for any vintage.

But despite surface optimism, it is clear that rain has had, and is having, an impact on this vintage, though to a much lesser extent than in 2005.

Why is rain such a problem for vineyards? "Rain is dilutive," said Matt Gilles, general manager at Peconic Bay Winery. "It dilutes flavors and natural sugars. It can also restrict a significant amount of growing days because of reduced sunshine and the added horrible effects of the mildews that stem from such weather. Mildew is catastrophic, but fortunately we managed to avoid it this year."

Richard Pisacano, vineyard manager at Wolffer Estate, added "sluggish ripening" and the danger that "fruit will lose its integrity before reaching adequate ripeness." This is of particular concern on the South Fork, where the growing season is typically ten days shorter than on the North Fork.

Bunch rot and split grapes are just a couple more rain-related detriments.

Experience is the best teacher, however, and many Long Island vineyard managers have learned ways to weather the storms – including pruning, canopy management, reducing the crop (known as "dropping fruit") and more diligent spraying. Another of Pisacano's methods is to "hope and pray." Clearly, even the most seasoned grape growers know that they are at Mother Nature's mercy, especially at this time of year.

So far, mostly white grapes have been harvested along with some pinot noir – both for still and sparkling wines. Peconic Bay Winery has picked their Riesling, even if some of it was less ripe than usual. At Wolffer Estate, Pisacano and his crew have harvested their chardonnay, pinot noir and pinot gris. And, to help eliminate rain-damaged fruit, "all were hand picked carefully to eliminate any undesirables," said Pisacano.

Waters Crest Winery, Comtesse Therese and several other wineries have picked chardonnay as well with generally good results. Jim Waters, co-owner and winemaker at Waters Crest Winery, said his fruit showed "good (sugar and acid) numbers with very nice flavors." But fans of Waters' Riesling and gewürztraminer will be disappointed, said the winemaker. "We will only bring in chardonnay for whites in 2006." Waters doesn't have his own vineyard and was unable to purchase the quality fruit he wanted for the other varieties.

The red grape harvest will begin this weekend and last until mid-November – weather willing. "After a wet spring, our vineyard manager Charlie Hargrave here at Peconic Bay seriously lightened the crop load

Tasting Vintage Variation at Osprey's Dominion

You can buy bottle after bottle of mass-produced, ubiquitous wines like Yellowtail Shiraz or Cavit Pinot Grigio without even looking at the year on the label. That's because year-to-year variation is barely perceptible in those wines. Huge vineyards, huge production and blending options that lead to a "house style" all result in fairly consistent flavors year in and year out. That's boring if you ask me.

That sort of cookie cutter consistency is not the case here on Long Island, where even the largest vineyards are miniscule by world standards. And, with generally cool weather that changes considerably from one year to the next, local producers are really at the mercy of Mother Nature.

And so are your taste buds — because no matter how good a winemaker is, it all begins with the fruit. As the saying goes, "Garbage in. Garbage out."

Some of our region's best years have 1995, 2001 and 2005. Reds from the 2005 vintage haven't been released yet and won't be for another couple years — but don't miss them. I've tasted several in barrel and the intensity and depth are unlike any Long Island wines I've tasted.

Of course, bad wine can still be made in even the best years — and good wine can be made in less-than-optimal years as well partially because Long Island has so many unique micro-climates. One vineyard can get several inches of rain the same day that one just up the road doesn't get a drop. And, unfortunately, an overzealous or over-manipulating winemaker can destroy the beauty and quality of perfect grapes.

The best way to see vintage differences yourself is by tasting the same wine, from the same winery, through at least a few vintages, side by side.

Without a deep wine cellar, and the patience to hold onto older vintages, this can be difficult to accomplish. But one winery on the North Fork is making it a little bit easier.

Osprey's Dominion Vineyards in Peconic is offering three consecutive vintages — 2000, 2001 and 2002 — of its "Flight" Meritage red blend in gift-worthy three packs. This flight of "Flight" is $99 — not cheap, but chip in with a few friends, share the cost and learn a little about Long Island's recent vintage history.

Osprey's Dominion's 2000 Flight ($35 when purchased separately) has an aromatic nose that offers blackberries, light oak toastiness, and subtle fresh herbs. This blend of merlot and cabernet sauvignon is fruit forward and elegant with flavors — blackberry, black cherry, smoky oak, and herbs — that are balanced nicely by ripe, medium grip tannins. The finish is lengthy and offers a little eucalyptus at the very end.

The ripeness of the 2001 vintage comes through with more intensity and less nuance in winemaker Adam Suprenant's 2001 Flight ($35). On the nose, intense blackberry and blueberry are accented by herbs, tomato leaves and subtle wet soil earthiness. This wine displays a similar profile on a rounder, fuller-flavored palate, with ripe, well-integrated tannins, and a little acidity.

Much more similar to the 2000, Osprey's Dominion's 2002 (N/A) hasn't been released on its own yet. Straightforward blackberry aromas and noticeably less oak character mark the nose. The palate is youthful with bright fruit and slightly astringent tannins and acidity. This one isn't quite ready for drinking yet, but that makes this flight of "Flight" all the more educational — you can taste similar wines in different stages of development.

Of the three, my favorite is the 2000 for its refined style and balance. Visit www.ospreysdominion.com or call 765-1903 and find out which you prefer.

so the vines could tolerate some adversity in the weather and fully ripen the crop," said Gillies. "We are below 2 tons an acre in places with 1100 vines per acre contributing to the effort. I believe that more than meets Robert Parker's credo as to how to make world class wine and I think it will pay off this year."

Weather, as you may have guessed, is the key to how the rest of 2006's harvest will go, and a strong storm that dumped six to eight inches on parts of the East End a few weeks ago definitely brought back bad memories from last season. But luckily, the rain didn't last and the weather has been much better since.

Pisacano doesn't want much from the weather over the next two months, joking, "it would be great if the sun refused to set and instead rotated in the sky for a few weeks. But seriously, we need plenty of sun, dry weather, no prolonged dew and lots of wind. An interesting note is that the heat wave and droughty period in August was a huge help. It accelerated verasion (ripening period when the grapes begin to turn color) and advanced ripeness so that when the ugly weather did come we already had a nice level of maturity." Gillies concurs, saying he'd love it to be "dry, dry, dry and warm with cool evenings, and a little wind doesn't hurt to increase transpiration and remove that water."

So love Long Island wine lovers will just have to wait and see. This could be a vintage like 2000 — one of elegant, flavorful wines. Or it could rain for the next several weeks and be a year filled with rosé because the reds are so diluted or damaged. Here's to dry, warm, windy weather until Thanksgiving.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

Toys

I've been an avid toy collector since I was a kid. First it was Fisher Price and Playmobil, then He-Man and GI-Joe, and today it's a lot of things. Super heroes are high on my list, but really, whatever looks cool to me might end up displayed on my desk. In time I'll find a new little plastic fetish and the old will be banished to one of many plastic storage bins. Let me tell you, my wife simply adores my hobby. It costs money, takes up valuable space, and says volumes about my maturity level. On the bright side, I'm pretty keyed into the whole toy collecting market and when it comes to eBay, I'm a pro. For example, I recently picked up a pile of action figures from a local shop—that will remain anonymous to protect my interests—one for me, one to sell. So, for $9.99 each I bought a pair of the same figure. I kept one for myself and sold the other on eBay for $86. Minus shipping, that's a profit of $66.01. Believe it or not, there are a lot of grown men doing exactly what I do, and certain figures are just that hard to find. I have a Tupac Shakur figure that was discontinued due to lawsuits and I've seen one sell for hundreds. At best, I can figure that my collection could sell for well into the thousands; I've got enough to open my own shop. Unfortunately, that would be a disaster out here, but in Manhattan there's a definite market.

A few New York toyshops in particular have withstood the test of time. I'm not talking Toys-R-Us or FAO Schwarz. No, I want to introduce you to specialized spots for freak collectors like me (and maybe you). The difference between your average chain store and what I'm talking about is quite defined. The specialized shops find the rare stuff and mark it up, stock the regular lines adult collectors buy, and some focus on imported Japanese and limited-edition artist/designer stuff that is really more like art. Hip, urban graffiti artists, who are now part of broader art circles, are releasing their own, usually vinyl, toys. Starting prices for these are often $100-$400, but they usually skyrocket in value over the months following their selling out.

Love Saves the Day, on 2nd Avenue between St. Marks and 7th, is probably the longest running, downtown vintage toyshop. Madonna bought her leather jacket there in the beginning of the 80's classic, Desperately Seeking Susan. They're known for having a mishmash of action figures spanning several decades. Here you'll find vintage GI-Joe and Star Wars figurines, WWF wrestlers, and celebrity likeness dolls like O.J. Simpson, Elvis, and Michael Jackson. Who wouldn't want to set O.J. and Jacko up for a tea party? The results would be tremendous. So there's that. But basically right upstairs is a store much more connected to the latest in toy trends. ToyTokyo carries all that vintage stuff, plus a whole lot more. It's here you will find some of the more rare Japanese and designer toys. Look for KAWS vinyl "Companions." KAWS is an American graffiti artist who has appropriated images like Mickey Mouse and the Michelin Man and made them his own in a series of statues. Each is created in a limited number and the prices will make you gag until you truly understand the nature of the beast. Like the Jeff Koons Puppy vase or his newest Balloon Dog edition, they are legitimate works of art in large, yet limited editions. KAWS has become something of a sensation in Japan, and I would recommend looking for pieces from his Original Fake store in that country. His newest "Dissected" Companion, (which I bought, and is his best in my opinion) really connects KAWS to the broader art world by using his Mickey Mouse character appropriation and combining it with Damien Hirst's "Virgin Mother," a sculpture of a half-dissected pregnant woman erected in the Lever House courtyard on 53rd and Park. For more designer toys, see Kidrobot on 126 Prince Street. Expect long lines for the newest hot releases. It's a whole new world of art. Once you jump in, you'll be amazed how deep this rabbit hole goes, and Manhattan is the place to do it.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Firebreak & Dwarf Pines

Naturalist Bill Mathews invited me to accompany him as he previewed trails in preparation for his Westhampton Beach School District adult education course, Walking Tours of Greater Westhampton. We met on Speonk Riverhead Road, one mile south of CR 51. On the left side of the road, just before a curve, three vertical metal pipes mark the entrance to the trail. These trails are not blazed; when I walk here I always carry a copy of Larry Paul's East Pine Barrens map (LIGTC 631-360-0753).

Bill and I headed east on Middle Line of Toppings Purchase (MLTP). We followed this straight woods road for almost two miles. Naked, bleached tree trunks, relics of the Great Wildfire of 1995, tower above scrub oak and young pitch pine trees. Early succession groundcover, such as heather, bearberry, and reindeer lichen, is plentiful. A short distance into the walk, we crossed over an illegal north/south-running ATV trail, which seems to follow a boundary line between parcels of land. We used part of this "boundary trail" near the end of our walk.

Suddenly we found ourselves among mature oak and pinewoods. Just before this transition area, the woods road cuts across a narrow ribbon composed almost exclusively of pitch pine trees. These trees are several years more mature than the trees emerging from the burned area. I expect that from above, it would appear as a mile-long green line describing the boundary of the wildfire. On Larry's map it is labeled as a fire road. We noticed the raised shoulder of soil caused by the bulldozers scraping away the flammable duff down to the mineral soil. A couple of years after the fire, Mindy Block and Kenny Spadafora planted three-year-old pitch pine seedlings in this 15-foot-wide scar. Recently, Kenny and I tried to walk part of this "fire road" and found that the closely planted seedlings have grown into a nearly impenetrable wall. If you wish to learn more about these environmental restoration projects, you can visit their website at www.qualityparks.org.

After a short walk through mature woods, we arrived at an intersection with another woods road, Old West Hampton Road (OWH). If you turn right and walk a short distance south on OWH you will find a panoramic view of the now verdant burn area. If we followed OWH north, we could have cut the loop we were walking in half, but we intended to visit the pygmy pines along the way. Continuing east on MLTP, we noticed the uneven trail tread caused by motorized vehicles. The large oaks began to disappear and were replaced by scrub oak. Smaller and smaller trees were gradually replacing the large pines. As we grew close to Sunrise Highway we found ourselves looking down on a mature tree canopy.

After following a trail running east, parallel to the State DOT wire fence, about a quarter-mile, we found a woods road opening to our left. This is an extension of the DEC red trail. It intersects with the Paumanok Path on its way to the DEC red loop a couple of miles north of here. We followed this trail a short distance and turned left onto Main Trail. We could now see the dome of the radar tower one mile away. It sits at an elevation of 250 feet. There are remains of a small trail system that took hikers to several vistas in that area. Mature trees now block these vistas, and the trails are either overgrown or badly churned up by ATVs.

Main Trail crosses over OWH a half-mile north of where MLTP intersected it. From here the trail angles directly west. To our right, we passed several faintly defined trails running north to the Hampton Hills Golf Course. A mile further, we passed the opening to a barely discernable trail leading north, to the old vistas. About 400 feet after passing the opening to the vista access trail, we turned left and headed south on the same unnamed boundary trail we had cut across earlier.

Once again we came to a transition area with mature woods on one side and an area of re-growth on the other. And, once again, we saw the dense ribbon of trees bordered by a mound of earth. We were intersecting the firebreak west of where we had walked earlier. Bill and I continued south, turned right onto MLTP and soon found our cars parked along Speonk Riverhead Road.

Ken Kindler is a Trails and Open Space Advocate working to help the trails groups and land managers care for our "Natural Island." If you would like to learn more about our trails or help care for them, visit the Hiking Long Island website. www.hike-li.org.

EAST END KID: WIRED'S NEXTFEST

BY EMILY HART

HELP FROM KATLEAN
DE MONCHY AND
DAVID POST

Robots are cool. When they become available I want to get one. And the expert said that in 10-15 years, people will have robots that help them in their homes and in hospitals and at work. I went to the Nextfest with my dad and it was very crowded but I got a chance to see some of the exhibits they had there at the convention center. First we went to the robot conference and we sat right near the stage. I saw three people on the stage that Dad explained were not real. I was a little afraid at the beginning but then I was OK because they looked so real and they moved just like us. My favorite part – when I played hand-the-stone back and forth with a little robot. Then I played with a cute furry robot they are testing in hospitals and homes for the elderly. Then we went to the Discovery booth and saw a movie about visits to countries around the world that will be on TV when you read this. Science is fun. Hope you might consider going next year.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

When Pat Kollhopp called to invite us to a "harvest brunch" and then followed her invitation with, "We're cooking the vegetables that are growing in our garden," I immediately accepted and thought "what a great idea," which needless to say inspired me to write this article. Southampton residents, Pat and Fred Kollhopp – Fred of Swiss heritage – are resolute gardeners and admirable cooks. I knew we were in for an autumnal feast.

When Fred visited relatives in Switzerland he was drawn to the meticulously maintained gardens; even the flowers along the railroad tracks were a vision, he said.

In their own garden, a neatly laid out space of approximately 10 x 20 feet, beet greens poke out of the ground along with 2 crops of lettuces, and a variety of herbs; luscious purple eggplants gracefully hang from their vines, as do over-sized heirloom Italian plum tomatoes – Fred received the seeds from an Italian friend and beams when he shows them off. The cucumbers and zucchini were picked over that warm sunny Sunday so the Kollhops could prepare a flavorful cucumber dill soup, and a crustless, cheesy zucchini-tomato quiche. More tomatoes were layered into a salad with sliced mozzarella, and a superb zucchini bread was prepared for their delectable brunch. Fred also afforded his guests winning mushroom-stuffed clams, with clams he harvested himself. Pat, a marvelous baker, extended the sweet offerings with a variety of cookies and chocolatey meringues.

Upon viewing the colorful garden I commented to Pat on how well-organized the space was, to which she exclaimed, "That's the Swiss gardener!"

GARDEN FRESH ZUCCHINI BREAD

A good use of the garden zucchini, advises Pat.

Makes 1 9 x 5 loaf pan or 4 mini loaf pans

- 3 large eggs
- 1 cup canola oil
- 1 cup sugar
- 2 cups grated zucchini, about 3, well drained
- 2 teaspoons vanilla extract
- 2 cups all-purpose flour
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/4 teaspoon baking powder
- 3 tablespoons cinnamon
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 cup chopped walnuts

Butter loaf pan/or mini pans and dust with flour or plain breadcrumbs

Preheat oven to 350 degrees

1. Beat eggs in a bowl. Add oil, sugar, zucchini, and vanilla then stir to mix. Put the flour, baking soda, baking powder, cinnamon, and salt in a large bowl and stir to mix until thoroughly incorporated. Make a well in the center of the dry ingredients and add the egg mixture. Gradually combine the dry ingredients with the wet until thoroughly incorporated. Add the nuts and stir to mix. With a rubber spatula scrape the mixture into the prepared pan, or pans, and bake up to one hour for the single loaf pan or about 40-45 minutes for the mini pans, or until a cake tester or skewer inserted into the center of the bread comes out clean.

CRUSTLESS ZUCCHINI TOMATO QUICHE

Lots of good stuff from the garden here – zucchini, tomatoes, basil, and chives.

3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

- 1 large Vidalia or Spanish onion, thinly sliced
- 2 1/4 - 2 1/2 cups grated zucchini, about 3
- Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
- 3 medium-large ripe tomatoes
- 1/2 cup packed julienne of fresh basil
- 1/2 cup snipped chives
- 1/2 cup shredded Vermont cheddar cheese
- 1/2 cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese
- Butter for the baking dish
- 3 large eggs, beaten
- 1/2 cup milk

1. Heat the oil in a large 10 to 12-inch skillet and sauté the onions for about 6-8 minutes until translucent. Add the zucchini, toss to mix with the onions and sauté for 4-5 minutes longer. Season the mixture with salt and pepper. Transfer the mixture to a colander over a bowl and let drain for 10-15 minutes.

2. Meanwhile, slice the tomatoes about 1/4-inch thick, prep the herbs and grate the cheese.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

3. Butter a shallow baking dish large enough to hold all the ingredients, about 12-inch round or oval gratin. Spread the zucchini-onion mixture in the prepared dish, arrange overlapping tomato slices over the top and season with salt and pepper. Scatter herbs over the tomatoes and crown with the two cheeses. Beat the eggs with the milk and pour over the cheese. Place in preheated oven and bake for 45 minutes until custard is set. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Note: Can prepare up to 2 days before serving. Cover with foil to reheat as necessary.

Getting Frisky With Whiskey

All whiskey is not created equal. In fact, whiskey may be one of the most confusing categories of hard alcohol simply because of its broad range; from Old Crow to 12-year Dalwhinnie, from Jim Beam to Johnny Walker Blue, "whiskey" covers sweet to smoky, Scotch to bourbon, and everything in between.

In 750 words, I have the task of summing up 2800 years of history, inter-continental evolution and jurisdiction. I spent a year in Scotland, trying to unearth the facts and history of whiskey, what makes a Scotch a Scotch, what makes a blend, what makes Irish whiskey different and how come Jack Daniels doesn't taste anything like anything on the opposite side of the Atlantic. This is the best I can come up with.

Basically, we have the Celts to thank for the fermentation and distillation of grains (barley, rye) as far back as 800 BC. That's right, about 400 years before the Greeks came up with the Hippocratic Oath, the Scots, Irish, Welsh, and Cornish were using whiskey to heal the sick and revive the dead.

As far as breaking up the differences in the "water of life," I am going to be rather broad, because separating the differences between Highland and Island Scotch is enough for its own article. So here are the basics.

Scotch must be made in Scotland. It is as simple as that. And for the most part, the barley used for creating the mash is dried through the use of a peat fire. As gross as it sounds, peat is decomposed plant matter that becomes a solid. It is used throughout the UK and Ireland as a source of heat. But, for the creation of whiskey, it is a distinctly Scottish thing. This drying on a peat fire gives Scotch the smoky flavor it is known for (though sometimes, as in the case of Tobermory, from the Isle of Mull, the barley is dried on a clean fire, because the water used in the fermentation process travels through peat bogs, picking up the delicate flavors of the peat). Also, for the most part, Scotch whiskey is distilled twice, removing a good deal of impurities from the final spirit.

But distilling only twice is blasphemy when it comes to the Irish. The Old Bushmill distillery makes an issue of informing their visitors that they distill their whiskey three times. They claim that this removes much of the impurities that the double distillation of Scotch does not. Also setting Irish and Scotch whiskey apart, Irish whiskey-making technique demands that the barley be dried over a clean burning fire, not a smoky peat fire. Both the triple distillation and the clean fire lead to a "smoother-tasting" spirit.

Canadian Whiskey is generally disgusting and I don't even want to waste my time on it, though I must say, Yukon Jack has a truly unique flavor, far from any other whiskey on the market and it is a personal favorite of mine. Besides that, the only thing you should know is that many Canadian distilleries are affiliated with Scottish distilleries, and follow a similar process, but end up with an inferior product.

American whiskey is an institution all its own. How Jim Beam can be classified as whiskey when compared to Talisker is puzzling, but they all fall under the broad classification of "whiskey." Generally, we break the American genre down into three categories: bourbon, whiskey and rye. Bourbon (Knob Creek), despite what many believe, does not have to be made in Bourbon County, Kentucky. In fact, today almost no bourbon is made in Bourbon County, but by law, Bourbon must be made in the US and is actually the official spirit of America. It is generally made from at least 51% corn, but the percentage is usually higher, with the rest being made of wheat, rye or barley, and is placed in charred oak barrels for no less than two years to age.

American whiskey, or more specifically Tennessee whiskey (Jack Daniel's) must undergo the Lincoln County Process. This filtering system passes the whiskey through a column of charcoal chips (many vodkas are filtered in a similar fashion), which removes some of the impurities from the spirit. It is then aged in oak barrels, similar to the aging process of Bourbon, but this filtering system sets Tennessee whiskey apart.

What sets Rye whiskey apart from Bourbon and Tennessee whiskey is that it must be made with at least 51% rye (the same grain in rye bread). This is a less popular choice at the bars, but during the Prohibition it was quite the trend.

Sadly, I haven't even gotten to discuss blends and single malts, but with winter bearing down on us, I'll have plenty of time to cozy up to a nice bottle and do some more research.

review: a chorus line...by gordin & christianano

A glossily refurbished revival of the Michael Bennett classic A Chorus Line has arrived on Broadway sixteen years after the endearing musical ended a nearly fifteen-year run, becoming one of the most successful Broadway musicals ever. When it opened in 1975, A Chorus Line was considered an extraordinary groundbreaking achievement, winning nine Tony awards, including best score by Marvin Hamlisch, best lyrics by Edward Kleban, best book by James Kirkwood and Nicholas Dante, as well as multiple wins for the actors. The current reincarnation clones the brilliant original in almost every detail right down to the costumes, and while the dancing remains gripping, the evening fails as drama where the original soared.

As a reproduction the show looks as great now as it did 16 years ago. At first glance nothing has changed, designers Robin Wagner (sets) and Theoni V. Aldredge (costumes) have given us what appears to be an exact replica of the first show. Natasha Katz has even adapted Tharon Musser's wonderful lighting plan. Director Bob Avian, who co-choreographed the first outing, has made a wise choice to carefully restore the original look and sound as a loving tribute to the landmark musical. When the curtain rises on the revival there is a rush of adrenaline that takes you back to the excitement from 1975 and your expectations grab hold with a spine-tingling jolt as the dancers begin their routine, that unfortunately fades as the evening unfolds.

The innovative story, conceived by Michael

Bennett, about dancers auditioning for eight parts in the chorus of a big Broadway musical, where they in turn "put their lives on the line," revealing their unique stories in the process, remains cleverly novel and gives everyone a moment to shine. Bennett was a dancer himself and actually culled the material from hours of taped interviews with real "gypsies" as an inspiration to their spirit of sacrifice. The writers then shaped it through workshops at the Public Theatre into what you hear today. Many of the "gypsies" actually appeared in the original, providing some of the evening's most moving and authentic moments. Their craving for the job and acceptance was beautifully realized, and their struggles clawed at your heart. Here their nervousness feels feigned and punctuated and while their tales remain heartbreaking, they have now been sentimentalized, distancing you for the raw truth. Each of the dancer/actors possess wonderful qualities that fit their respective parts, but they have not been guided into living in the life of the text, and ultimately we feel nothing.

What remains passionately resilient about the imaginative musical, which is performed in just over 2 hours without an intermission, is the exhilarating Marvin Hamlisch score, the fabulous lyrics by Edward Kleban, and the intoxication of the vibrant dancing and impressive choreography that has been stimulatingly restaged by Baayork Lee.

With advance bookings of almost 10 million there must be a new generation of theatre people, dancer's included, who have never seen the landmark original, as well as many craving a blast of nostalgia. They may not know the difference or even care, because when these awesome performers break into dance, singing and moving in one seamless whole, the evening is, indeed, thrilling, becoming "one singular sensation." You forgive their shortcomings and everything seems exactly as you remember it.

A Chorus Line opened on October 5 at the Schoenfeld Theatre, 236 West 45th St. between Broadway and Eighth Avenue. For tickets call 212-239-6200 or visit the box office.

MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

The Grudge 2

Sarah Michelle Gellar returns in the sequel to one of 2004's most successful American adaptations of classic Japanese horror. The plot still revolves around the inexplicable and contagious fit of rage and luckily the shocks are still as sharp. This time the focus is on Gellar's character's sister, played perfectly adequately by Sister of the Traveling Pants star Amber Tamblyn.

Man of the Year

Barry Levinson, director of the excellent Wag the Dog, is back on familiar ground with this tale of a talk show host (Robin Williams) who jokingly runs for president and wins. Sharp, funny and with an excellent cast (including Laura Linney, Christopher Walken and the ever-superb Jeff Goldblum) this is well worth a look.

The Marine

Never let it be said that you walked into this unwarned. The film's star is John Cena of WWE (formerly WWF) fame and the director, John Bonito, comes with the same, ahem, pedigree. The plot concerns a returning marine who finds his wife involved in a kidnapping - not that it really matters. Big muscles, big bangs, little thought.

The Departed

Martin Scorsese's on familiar territory here with this epic tale of the battle between the police and the Irish mafia in Boston. It's all very Boys Own Adventure with a strong line in honor and justice, mouthed out by a cast boasting Leonardo DiCaprio, Jack Nicholson, Martin Sheen and Matt Damon to name but a few. Not for everyone but very polished for what it is.

Employee of the Month

The continual fame of the utterly talentless and charmless Jessica Simpson is perhaps the precursor to the arrival of the Four Horseman of the Apocalypse. No longer content to haunt the radio and MTV, this sees her cast as the stunning lady for whose attention Dane Cook and Dax Shepard must fight for as they vie for the title of Employee of the Month. There is no justifiable excuse for watching this film.

The Texas Chainsaw Massacre: The Beginning

Leatherface is perhaps the least enigmatic of cinema's serial killers. Freddy Krueger has wit, Halloween's Michael has a backstory, while Leatherface is mostly just a moaning screaming beast. Alas, this attempt to flesh out his history is less than impressive. Extremely gory and harsh, in the manner of the original, this lacks the empathy it so badly needs.

Open Season

Oh my god, make it stop! The summer's orgy of subpar CGI children's films shows no sign of stopping for fall with this dreadful tripe about a bear and a deer trying to escape the hunter's bullets. Like the awful Barnyard before it, this really feels like not an ounce of thought has gone into it. Vocal stylings come from bargain bin actors Ashton Kutcher and Debra Messing among others.

School for Scoundrels

Director Todd Phillips, of Starsky and Hutch, Old School fame, may not have the most inspirational track record but this adaptation of the 1960 British comedy is deeply funny. The plot concerns a young man's (Napoleon Dynamite's excellent lead, Jon Heder) attempts to become a better man. With actors such as David Cross and Sarah Silverman in supporting roles, this is too enjoyable to miss.

Jackass Number 2

It's been a while since Johnny Knoxville, Steve-O and Wee Man have been on our screens indulging their masochism and perhaps it hasn't been long enough. There's plenty of winceinducing violence here and some genuinely funny (if obviously excruciating) physical comedy but the sense of excitement seems to have gone out of this circus of pain.

Jet Li's Fearless

Allegedly the master's last martial arts film, Jet Li is going out on a high with this biopic of Chinese master Huo Yuanjia. As ever with such fare, much of the excitement comes from a visceral thrill of violence, but there is a real beauty in just watching Li move. A brutal kind of ballet.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

In entertainment industries dominated by "muscle" (the movies ruled by testosterone and television by Viagra), I would like to bow deeply to one of the gutsiest actors in the business, the brilliantly persuasive Helen Mirren. She is so strong, she's managed to draw out an enormous emanation of life from behind the pastel-veiled Elizabeth II in her latest film The Queen. We wisenheimers were sure there never was life in the maturing matriarch. We are proven wrong by an unblinking script for The Queen by Peter Morgan and glaringly incisive direction by Stephen Frears (Dangerous Liaisons), but it is the supremely singular, subtle performance by Ms. Mirren (Dame Helen, invested by Prince Charles in 2003) that befits a crown. This year, she earned an Emmy as Elizabeth I in HBO's miniseries.

Elizabeth II's crown has taken a number of hits. However, the Crown never really showed a tilt, let alone a dent or a precious stone out of place. It was Diana, Princess of Wales, who crashed many times into the decorous silver and diamond armor of the Queen's stoic dislike for her. Finally, the tragic car smash-up in 1997 was an unsettling coup de grace for Elizabeth. The Queen was dead; long live the deceased Princess Diana, the new ruler of the realm. This troubled time is the basis of The Queen. The tremendous popularity of Diana, now brought to a head by the heart wrenching news, had put the Queen teetering between a gutter-step down to being a despot and six steps up to the guillotine.

Tony Blair utilized his own popularity, as the newly-elected Prime Minister, with the grace of a ballerina. His soft pumps squeaked only a bit on the cold palace floors as he spun, in gentle pirouettes, apt reasons to convince the Queen to "come out" and participate in a national mourning for the Peoples' Princess. This ritual dance provides the center of Mr. Frears' sympathetic satire that pictures The Queen's inbred complacency and reluctance to accede to the public and press who's having a great old time with the Royals vs. the People. What will Diana's funeral bring about? Will the Queen give up the sanctuary of Windsor and Balmoral Castles? It is within these walls, that the quiet conflicts take place, as the cast of characters in turn, converse with Elizabeth. They include Blair, acted by Michael Sheen; "Mr. Queen" Prince Phillip, a wonderfully vacant James Cromwell; the sly Queen Mother, Sylvia Syms; and Prince Charles, surprisingly understanding and likeable as played by Alex Jennings. Their encounters with the Queen, as she stands steadfast, whether in regal attire, a bathrobe or in tweed accompanying her Corgis on a walk, approaches near melodrama. It is inexplicable. So masterful is the presentation of the theatrics. Of course, it helps to have the inclusion of the wild card of Diana's death—the crushing demise of the headline dominating carefree divorcee killed in a speeding car with her Egyptian lover. This is dramatic stuff, but you will see that the engrossing drama is that of the Queen's.

All right, I know you die-hard wisecrack-wisenheimers are still thinking this is fare for TV's afternoon Lifetime cable. Give this a break! Actor Mirren may not be your favorite Martin Scorsese star, but given the opportunity, she could be. This role, for Mirren, is more challenging than Robert De Niro doing a Scorsese movie. For her, this is a real stretch. In her younger days, she supported the anti-monarchist Workers' Party. When she accepted the role she knew you-know-what would hit the fan, but she is gallant. A terrific actor takes risks.

In this age of Hollywood "Royalty" few are "kings" or "queens," though they must have script approval and the role must be them. There are a few other performers who've played crowned heads and deserve to wear one, notably Cate Blanchett. However, Helen Mirren has done the time. Shakespeare on stage in her 20s and dubbed, "The sex queen of Stratford." She's about 60 now and in her 7th year as detective Jane Tennison in the cutting TV series Prime Suspect, and in the past has starred, pubescently swell and swollen in a sarong, in 1969's Age of Consent, 1979's Caligula, Playboy's soft porn and Oscar-nominated 1994's Madness of King George and Gosford Park in 2001, which she received an Oscar nod for Supporting Actress. She's doing just fine, thank you, in spite of a few roles that might have stalled other's careers. Bobby De Niro's done the same and they're still worthy of wearing ermine—if they want to.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. Sarah Halsey assists him.

Dr. Bronner's Magic Soapbox, Golden Starfish Documentary, East Coast Premiere.

Fri. 10/20, 1:20 p.m. UA EH, Sun. 10/22 1:30 p.m. UA EH.

This entertaining documentary, directed by Sara Lamm, follows the eccentric life of Dr. Emanuel Bronner. A German-Jewish immigrant who escaped from a mental institution in 1947, Bronner invented the formula for a peppermint-infused, all-natural, multi-purpose liquid soap that can be found in health food stores across America. Aside from being a soap maker, Bronner was a philosopher, who allegedly stated that he was Albert Einstein's nephew. On his soap labels, he printed some 30,000 words of his ever-evolving set of teachings called the "Moral ABCs," which were designed to unite humanity on "spaceship earth."

Dr. Bronner's son Ralph, who has carried on the legacy and teachings since his father's death in 1997, is depicted traveling throughout the country to lecture and spread his father's vision. Besides his wacky behavior and tingling soap, Bronner will be remembered as a man who was concerned with the welfare of humanity.

The Front Line, Films of Conflict and Resolution Competition, US Premiere.

Fri. 10/20 4:30 p.m. UA EH, Sat. 10/21 11 a.m. Montauk.

Directed by David Gleeson, this film is set in Dublin and follows the trials and tribulations of Joe Yumba, an African refugee from the Congo who seeks shelter in Ireland. As the movie unfolds, we view Joe in his new occupation as a security guard at a bank. While attempting to find peace now that his asylum application has been approved and he has been reunited with his family, we see that his happiness is short lived. Joe comes face to face with the leader of a local gang who offers him a deadly ultimatum. His ethical and moral limits are tested as he must either help these gangsters access the bank's vault or lose his loved ones. Summoning all of his courage and strength to keep his family alive, Joe's true identity and the scars from a past of civil war and bloodshed arise. This film will keep you on your toes as the plot twists and turns allowing viewers to discover that things aren't always what they seem to be.

Soap, World Cinema.

Oct. 19 3:30 p.m. / Oct. 20 1 p.m., UA EH.

Soap, a Berlin Film Festival award winner, is a dark Danish romance broken up into short, melodramatic episodes similar to an American soap opera. However, although the film strives to resemble American television, its flavor is decidedly European.

The story involves a young woman, Charlotte, who awakes one morning and decides to leave her boring life and her boring boyfriend and move into an apartment in a gritty city neighborhood. She has many lovers, as does the cross-dressing prostitute in the apartment below her. Eventually, the two become reluctant friends, and an attraction builds between them. However, their romance is interrupted by dramatic episodes in both of their lives, and the audience is left to decide how their story will end.

The melodrama of Soap is balanced by the acting of the two protagonists, whose over-awkwardness and preternatural cold-heartedness complement each other. The voice-over, an Amelie-esque, deep voice of reason, asks the audience probing questions about the mental state and capacity of the two main characters through out the saga.

The film is enjoyable to watch, save for a few disturbing moments, yet the ending leaves you flat and craving a sequel.

Man Up, Shift, and Patterns 3, Golden Starfish Shorts.

Oct. 21 10:30 a.m. / Oct. 22 5 p.m., UA EH.

This year's Golden Starfish Award Nominees for Best Short Film include: Shift, a film about a young Asian-American actor who works the graveyard shift in a mailroom to pay for his headshots and learns "how the other half lives" in the process; Patterns 3, a musical about an awkward young couple that uses voodoo dolls to hurt each other while singing about their feelings for one another; and Man Up, a disquieting piece about an overbearing, bordering on abusive, father and his troubled, over-achieving son. Shift and Man Up are carefully crafted films that achieve the same effect of most feature-length films in under an hour. Shift follows Alex, a young actor, from a night job to the house of his spoiled love interest and back again. The audience sees his transformation quickly, as well as his difficulty coping with his triple life as an Asian-American in the lowest levels of Hollywood, a factory worker, and a "normal," college-age kid. This film has the awkwardness of a high-budget student film, yet the story and the acting are advanced beyond the film's sometimes-amateurish direction. Man Up explores one of the more disturbing parent-child relationship patterns using interviews shot in eerie fluorescent-green-lit gymnasiums and locker rooms. The father, a stereotypical ex-soldier who wishes he had advanced farther in rank, explains his theories on how to raise a "tough" young man by constantly conditioning children and removing every comfort from their lives. His son seems emotionally fragile, and the young actor's eyes reflect pain and loneliness beyond his sixteen years.

1:1 Films of Conflict and Resolution, East Coast Premiere.

Oct 19 7 p.m. / Oct. 20 12:30 p.m., UA EH.

Out of Denmark comes an intense film about family and race. Tensions run high in a Copenhagen suburb when a young Arab Muslim man is accused when a white teen is beaten near death. The characters are all intertwined; the police officer who discovers the victim is the boxing trainer of the accused man – the victim is the older brother of the accused's younger brother's girlfriend. All these connections get tested, brothers are pitted against each other, and interracial relationships are pulled apart as prejudices are brought to the surface.

Canvas Spotlight Films.

Oct. 21 6:30 p.m. / Oct. 22 1 p.m., UA EH.

Marcia Gay Harden and Joe Pantoliano star in this trying film which tears at the heart. Pantoliano is a father attempting to raise his young son, support his family, and live with his schizophrenic wife (Harden). When the son arrives home from a stay at an aunt's, his apprehension toward his mother is obvious. Her episodes continue to put him in embarrassing situations among peers and in harm's way. But when Harden is hospitalized, both father and son must come to terms with the situation – juggling the dream that the mother will become better, but knowing it may never come true.

Mentor, World Cinema

Oct. 19, 12:30 p.m. & 8 p.m., UA EH.

Directed by David Carl Lang, this movie follows the story of a love triangle, mixed with manipulation, literary ambition, and sexual tension. As the film unfolds, Carter is at a true dead end as a teacher of unmotivated and bored students at a small college. Outwardly pushed by his graduate assistant, Pollard, into a relationship with his student Julia, Carter seemingly surrenders; however, envy and resentment are not far beneath the surface in this awkward and complex arrangement. Soon, the news of Pollard's death unhinges Carter's memories of the past with his former girlfriend, a renowned writer. The cast of characters may seem run-of-the-mill with the inclusion of a brilliant yet jaded author and professor, a talented eager student and a driven graduate assistant and lover, but the balance and treatment of their emotional states makes this film worth every minute.

Gray Matters, East Coast Premiere.

Oct. 20 6 p.m., UA SH. / Oct. 21 7:30 p.m., EH UA.

When a brother (Sam) and sister (Gray) are so close that they are misconstrued as a couple, they decide to spend a little time apart to find actual significant others. Because they are like two peas in a pod who live together in NYC, are dance partners and best friends, they decide to find dates for each other. The tale takes a little twist when Sam falls for a girl named Charlie, only to have Gray also fall for her. Sibling rivalry has never been this good. Witty dialogue and banter makes this a fun and funny take on love and family. With a star-studded cast (Tom Cavanagh, Heather Graham, Bridget Moynahan) it's worth checking this out before it hits the cinemas.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

FILM AS ART: ANDY WARHOL AT GUILD HALL

Part 1

Guild Hall's current exhibition featuring portraits by Andy Warhol is an intriguing one, but not merely due to his works on the wall.

What's equally fascinating is Warhol's early film, The Chelsea Girls, which was screened once in August. The connection between the artist's portraits and his movie bears an examination.

While Warhol's prints of such people as Deborah Harry, Roy Lichtenstein and Lisa Minnelli became iconic imagery like the subjects themselves, there are figures like Donald Baechlor, Henry Geldzahler and child actor Brandon de Wilde who are depicted, too.

Only, these images are unrecognizable to the general public. In Baechlor's and de Wilde's cases, it's not their faces that count, but what they're doing: picking his nose and advertising Camels cigarettes, respectively.

One can look at the individual images and appreciate the collective persona. Or one can perceive the images as a series of "shots": a montage like in cinema, where each portrait contributes to an overall effect/idea/mood.

While The Chelsea Girls (1966), Warhol's first commercial success, was critically acclaimed for several reasons, its real value lies in the creation of an aesthetic that was purely accidental. Although such a phenomenon is not so unusual (the jump cuts in Godard's Breathless were also an accident of sorts), acknowledgement in Warhol's movie is long overdue.

Because the film had a running time of six and a half hours, the reels were shown on two screens simultaneously, thus reducing the time to three hours and fifteen minutes. The results, in this critic's mind, are significant, imbuing the work with formal elements appropriate to both movies and paintings/prints/photographs.

Each shot in The Chelsea Girls is a "long take," where the camera records the action without cutting from one image to the next.

Thus, individual shots become a kind of portrait, and particularly a Warhol portrait where the subject's qualities, although exaggerated, become fixed in the mind's eye.

Yet Warhol's filmic characters, like his portraits, are authentic and somehow identifiable even though they are also "odd." (Much of the film was improvised, thus adding to the perceived realism.)

"Donald Baechlor," by Andy Warhol

This paradox is established in Warhol's juxtaposition of the movie's images as well. In the first sequence, for example, one screen shows a close-up of a blond-haired woman cutting her bangs, while the other screen records a medium shot of a man conversing with a woman.

The lighting contrasts are also contradictory like the size of the competing figures; the blond woman's image is high-key or over-exposed while the living room scene with the couple is low-key, possessing lots of shadows. Opposition in camera movement is evident as well. At times an image on one screen has no movement at all while the other screen shows a slight zoom, for example.

Such contradictions were certainly accidental: Warhol could not have predicted that his movie was to be projected on two separate reels. Thank goodness for accidents.

Andy Warhol and Elizabeth Peyton will be on view at East Hampton's Guild Hall until Oct. 22.

HONORING THE ARTIST: SONIA GRINEVA

This week's cover seems perfect for the season: Main Street, East Hampton, in the fall. Its artist, Sonia Grineva, has graced the cover once before with her rendition of Town Hall, also in East Hampton. We caught up with Ms. Grineva as she was preparing to go to Italy. Even so, she still had time to travel to East Hampton once again from New York where she lives, setting up her easel on the golf course near the Maidstone Country Club.

Q: Why did you choose this particular site?

A: I love the landscape in the Hamptons. The clouds in the sky, the reflections in the water, the shades of the water. I look for lots of color, movement, space, interesting composition.

Q: Where else in America do you feel attracted to the landscape?

A: In Connecticut, especially Westport, with the water and sailboats, the Berkshires, upstate New York, particularly Saratoga.

Q: You must like the landscape in Italy as well where you can also paint outdoors.

A: Yes. I was in Florence many times; a few weeks ago, I was in Sorrento. This time I am going to the Amalfi Coast. The drive along the coast is so dramatic. I love to set up my easel wherever I am and paint. People are always coming up to me and start to talk. Sometimes I get a commission this way.

Q: It's nice that you enjoy so many different settings. How about Moscow, where you were born?

A: There's no water there to paint, of course. I've been here in America for ten years; New York reminds me of Moscow because there's so much activity. But there are more opportunities to exhibit your work here, like outdoor art fairs in Washington Square. It's such a rewarding experience.

Q: Did you always want to be an artist?

A: Yes; I went to art school in Moscow where I got a MFA.

Q: Did your parents encourage you? Here young people are not that encouraged to go into art.

A: Yes, they did, even though my father was a scientist. My parents had friends who were artists. They hired a private art teacher. My sister is a musician who lives in New York, and my parents encouraged her, too.

Q: What do you do when you're not outside painting?

A: I walk a lot and take Italian lessons. I also work at getting places to show my work.

Q: I hope you come back from Italy with lots of good experiences.

A: Arrivederci.

"Movies On My Mind" at Pollock-Krasner

The Pollock-Krasner house, once the site of many private discussions among famous artists about art, is playing host once more to "Movies on My Mind: Artists Pick Their Favorite Films." This annual film screening series, hosted by Dan's Papers art critic Marion Wolberg Weiss, offers an opportunity for lovers of all artistic mediums to watch a celebrated contemporary artist's favorite film with them, and then join in discussion and question and answer session with the artist after the film has ended. There are two more evenings in the series.

On Friday, October 12th, Donald Sultan will present Topsy-Turvy, the 1999 film based on the lives of composers Gilbert and Sullivan. Mr. Sultan participated in an event similar to this one at the Baltimore Film Festival, and he has said that this film is his personal favorite because it is "very visual and very well done." In fact, he thinks that it is "almost the perfect movie." Although it is a sort of cult classic, Topsy-Turvy is often overlooked on lists of great movies. Yet if an artist whose works are so graphically exquisite believes this film to be visually stunning, it must be quite a sight to behold.

On the following Friday, October twentieth, celebrated painter April Gornik will introduce Hayao Miyazaki's animated film Spirited Away, perhaps the most beautiful and delicately complex animated film ever created. Ms. Gornik has been quoted as admitting that this film was her second choice, next to Paul Thomas Anderson's three-hour-long Magnolia, which Ms. Weiss deemed too long for the event. However, Spirited Away seems to be more relevant to Gornik's own work than any live-action film. The vastness and vibrancy in Gornik's vistas could be the painterly answer to Miyazaki's sweeping, computer-animated landscapes in the ethereal world he has created in Spirited Away.

In her essay discussing visual literacy, Gornik discusses why, though it is a viable artistic medium, photography cannot have the same effect as an object created by hand, because she believes photos to be the work of a machine. With this in mind, her choice of an animated feature, painstakingly painted by hand, cel by cel, seems to fit flawlessly into Gornik's aesthetic ideal.

Gornik's own landscapes depict our world in a similar fashion to Van Gogh's absinthe-soaked canvasses, but replaces Van Gogh's unsteady undertones with a distinctly placid awe of these vibrant vistas. In Spirited Away, the audience sees the world through the eyes of Chihiro, a young heroine who has stumbled into a beautiful place, where the ethereal unfamiliar landscape begs to be explored.

Gornik has voiced her belief that American children are not taught to read visual symbols and mediums as they should, and thus they grow into adults without "a sensitivity to the basic language of art." Although Spirited Away cannot teach children about medium or texture, it is one of the very few widely-available modern films which forces the viewer to read the images, as opposed to simply processing plot points fed to them via descriptive dialogue. Miyazaki's film became a sensation in this country not because of its sparse dialogue but owing instead to the beauty and complexity of its images. By forcing children to unravel the visual story, Spirited Away teaches that very same visual sensitivity that April Gornik avidly promotes in both her writing and her painting.

Movies are personal; we sit in the dark, surrounded by the sounds and inundated by images for only a short while. The combination of visual matter and sound has proven to be the most effective way to reach a human being's mind and heart, and the images and stories from movies seem to linger in our minds long after the film has ended. Because of this intimate relationship between viewer and film, asking someone what his or her favorite movie is usually results in not only the naming of a title, but a carefully-thought-out explanation accompanied by a list of specific reasons which prove that this choice is worthy. While it is difficult to say with certainty that another person might agree, when a celebrated artist decides to share his or her views on this topic and also field questions, it offers insight into that artist and their own art as well, whether it be film, sculpture, painting, or any other medium.

The Pollock-Krasner House and Study Center is located at 830 Fireplace Road in The Springs in East Hampton. For more information about this or any other event at the Pollock-Krasner House and Study Center, please call 631-324-4929.

Checking Out, for the Moment

I have always had the philosophy that life is so short, we need to suck the juice out of it. We need to soak up every sweet morsel, even if it leaves us chewing on some bitters in the process, because if we leave that sweetness untapped, moments upon moments will be wasted.

This is how I choose to live, because I don't want to look back on my days with an ounce of regret. And this philosophy has furnished a delectable life thus far, one that I have thoroughly appreciated. Those who have been reading this column for some time know that the majority of the topics I cover relate directly to this philosophy, be it an article about the benefits of yoga, the power of herbs, or the sweetness of a deep breath. They all share this same fullness, this same surrender to the entirety of the moment.

But there are times when this philosophy may become burdensome, when life gets so challenging that you really do need a vacation from reality. It is not healthy to dwell in such phases. But sometimes, you have no choice but to get through them. In these hard times, I recommend the breathing, I recommend the herbs, I recommend the yoga. And you know what else can really lift you up on those difficult, dark afternoons? Bad TV.

I know you're thinking, "this is completely contradictory to all the healthy, fortifying activities that this column usually encourages," and you're right. It is. But another thing that is essential to healthy living is balance. And if you don't balance your high quality, moment-soaking activities with a couple of frivolous endeavors, you may get burned out on goodness. Now it's one thing to pour your brain and your emotions into some fictional character's drama if the show is well-written and the characters complicated. It is quite another to sit down and burn up your moments when you're watching some trashy show. However, there is something to be said for the absolute "tuning out" that occurs over a bad show on the Soap Network.

My guilty pleasure, which lay dormant for so long before reruns hit the airwaves, is "Beverly Hills, 90210." The saga of Brenda and Dylan, the arrival of Valerie, the ups and downs of David—they have me completely enthralled. And while I am ashamed to profess my love for these shallow characters, I have to say that there is some comfort when, coming home from a hard day's work, you can tune out for a little while and watch something really bad. Not something that you kind of relate to your life. Not something that teaches you lessons that you can apply to your days. I mean straight-up, dirty, wasteful trash.

I am not saying that this is the most productive way to spend your moments. Lying silently on the floor with the lights out and your knees pulled up to your chest would be more restorative. But I

THE Y FACTOR with Christian McLean

Breast Cancer And Men

As a man, breast cancer isn't a disease which stares me in the face every time I look in the mirror. In fact, only about 1500 American men are diagnosed with breast cancer, compared to over 200,000 women. We experience breast cancer from the periphery, as husbands, sons, brothers, and friends. Our struggle does not come in the form of overcoming chemotherapy and surgical procedures, but stranded on the sideline as cheerleaders, feeling otherwise helpless. But we aren't helpless, we aren't bystanders.

The 21st century has told men that they no longer have to be chivalrous, that women are more than capable of fending for themselves; they are our equals and sometimes our betters, but no one can exist without help and support.

The breast, though primarily utilitarian, is also a symbol of sexuality and beauty. The psychological toll of having a mastectomy is much greater than that of having a lung removed. This is by no means a superficial response, but one of cultural, social and inter-personal constraints, which can have long-term effects. While men are powerless when it comes to the surgery, our help as a supporter and listener can be immeasurable.

Men react in different ways to breast cancer. As

"bystanders," men sometimes find themselves self-conscious of everything they say and do. Others grow callous or removed. And while ignoring the problem isn't the proper answer, acting as you always have isn't as far a stretch as you think. By harping on the situation, whether for fear or for a lack of understanding, men make matters worse. The process is hard enough for women without their significant other bringing up his fears all the time. The truth is, it isn't your problem. When I say that it isn't meant to sound evil or horrid, but you must understand that everything that the man feels, a woman feels to the Nth degree.

Knowing your wife and her ability to cope is extremely important when discussing her breast cancer. Though honesty is usually the best policy, frightening your spouse with your own fears and apprehensions won't make things better. Even if you are extremely frightened, many breast cancer survivors say they don't want to hear it – their husband's fears compounded with their own make facing the disease even worse. That said, knowing your spouse and her threshold is very important, because you too have to face breast cancer. You have to deal with the fears and reality of it, and women fighting cancer want to know that their husbands care, that they understand, and if they don't understand at least that they are trying.

Dan's HOME

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

While there are many orchids appropriate for home growing, one of the most popular is the Cymbidium. And for good reason! Its blooms are magnificent and long-lasting. If a few rules are followed, the plant is dependable and can be brought into bloom year after year. Its flowers can last three months or more.

Cymbidiums are a genus of about 70 species within the orchid family. This means they are part of the Orchidaceae family of plants, and fall into a sub-family called Epidendroideae. The plant was first described in 1799 by the European botanist Olof Swartz. The name is derived from a Greek work "kumbos," which means "hole" or "cavity," referring to the form of the base of the lip of the flower. Cymbidiums became very popular in Europe in the Victorian Era because they bloom in winter when few other flowers bloom, and also because they survive well in temperate climates.

Cymbidiums originate from the wild subtropical mountains of Asia: China, Northern India, Japan, Malaysia, Thailand, the Philippines, and Borneo. They also appear in Northern Australia where they grow in the cool climates of higher elevations with daytime temperatures from 70 degrees to 100 degrees F. and nighttime temperatures as low as 40 degrees F. The ideal range of temperatures for these plants is from 50 degrees F. minimum to about 85 degrees F. maximum. Cymbidiums will tolerate temperatures as low as 34 degrees F. without permanent damage, but are not likely to flower if kept at low temperatures for more than a few days. Cymbidiums are sympodial – meaning that the leaves grow laterally. The plants can reach heights of about 3 feet tall. The leaves are generated from the base of a pseudobulb (a bulbous formation that stores water and nutrients). Flowers are produced on stems that emerge from the side of each pseudobulb produced. Flowers that emerge from the sides of the pseudobulbs may have a diameter of about two or three inches. The stems produced may have fifteen or more flowers. Flowers occur in a wide range of lovely colors including white, green, yellow-green, cream, yellow, brown, pink, red, and mahogany (and there may be markings of other color shades at the same time). The flowers last about ten weeks and have a waxy texture about them.

These orchids do very well when planted in a gritty soil/bark mixture that provides some porosity for the roots, which like moisture but hate being wet. They do equally well in sphagnum moss or fir bark. Plants should never become completely dry, especially during summer months, when the plants may require watering every two or three days if temperatures are above 80 degrees F.

Light is an important consideration when growing Cymbidiums. These plants like high-intensity light, though they prefer mid-day shade. Coming from cool, bright areas of Asia, they need high light and cool temperatures to do well. It is reasonable to keep the plants in the garden from May through October in partly sunny locations where they receive mid-day shade and overnight breezes. During winter months, keep the plants in a greenhouse or southern-facing window, and make sure the plants have adequate humidity (keep the pots on a tray of wet stones). A good rule of thumb is that the leaves should be a medium green color, not dark green.

Temperature is probably the most critical factors in growing Cymbidiums, as flowering is dependent on the temperatures to which the plant is exposed. During the summer, if grown outside, daytime temperatures should be in the 75 to 85 degree range (they can take more). At night, in late summer and autumn (August through October) temperatures need to be in the 50 to 65 degree range to initiate flowers. At Rock Cottage, we leave the plants outside until the third week of October. Optimum temperatures in winter are in the 45 to 60 degree range at night and 65 to 75 degrees during the day. When plants are in bud, temperatures need to be fairly constant, in the 55 to 75 degree range.

Cymbidiums benefit from fertilizing in the growing season. Use a high-nitrogen fertilizer once a month in summer. In late summer, use a high-phosphorus fertilizer such as 10-30-20 to help form bloom spikes. Fertilize at full strength every two weeks. In winter, fertilize once a month. Water-soluble fertilizers work best. Avoid high-nitrogen fertilizers after July because they stimulate leaf production but reduce flowers.

We believe Cymbidiums are an excellent addition to every garden. The next time you see one at a local nursery or florist – don't resist the temptation! You can contact Lance Brilliantine with any questions or comments at GardenLance@yahoo.com.

Shells And Shelves

Shelved in your study, buried in a box, or atop a friend's coffee table may rest that recently-finished book – the one you selected for a special season of summer reading. Wherever it may be, it is likely indoors, which you may see a lot more of sooner rather than later. Those orange and brown shades of October, as pretty in their own way as they may be, loom on the horizon with the cooler autumn temperatures that accompany them. As they push you inside, make sure you take a book with you. With a little imagination, you can bring a sense of summer's environment with you, allowing you to better focus your brainpower on the book before you.

Among the fans of summer reading on the beach, there remain common reasons why such a place is ideal after reading, such as the sun warming your face, the sand between your toes, the sound of the tide rushing up the sand and back, and so forth. Although nothing may compare to the real thing, you can recreate your favorite aspect of the beach in your home. Begin by breaking out that beach chair; it may now sit on a tile or hardwood floor, but your feet don't have to experience the same fate. For one that enjoys the twitching of toes or rubbing of heels in the sand, you can fill a tray or pan with authentic beach sand and place it before your seat (of course you have to pick-up that sand during one of your final trips to the beach before it's too cold to bear). Purchase, if necessary, place, and plug-in a footbath nearby. By the end of Chapter One, as your mind meanders through the story, your feet will be reminiscing about the sea lapping at your toes. You can subtly help your mind relax in this imaginary beach world with an album of white noise or marine sound effects. Sipping your summer juice or cocktail, you will be able to hear those familiar, comforting noises as you read from one plot point to the next.

Some summer literature fans may not consider a stretch of sand their preferred reading place. Instead they may enjoy zoning out in the garden, or lying on a blanket in a meadow or beneath a tree. Unfortunately, there are not many ways to bring warm, fresh grass inside without making a mess. Still, laying a blanket on top of your average foam mat, particularly the slightly ridged kind, can come close to the uneven softness of park grass. Those plants in your sunroom, entrance corridor, and everywhere else can be relocated to your temporary spot. They may not be large trees to lie beneath, but appropriate arrangements can let you reclusively recline among the vegetation. Some of the best plants arrangements to read beneath have mini fountains whirling beside them. The gargle of the water can convince your mind that you are reading near the tiny creek near your home.

Providing the warmth and light to best enhance these outdoor atmospheres that you have brought indoors requires effort and imagination. Sunlamps and space heaters are your best bet in creating the benefits of sunshine in your home. The skin is the body's largest organ, so why not bathe it with the therapeutic and healing light it needs and deserves to receive? For some, it even alleviates that seasonal depression that hovers when the sun sinks earlier and earlier in the day. When controlled, and not constantly on you for the entire amount of time indoors, ultra-violet light can help your body produce Vitamin D. From Calcium absorption to immune system boosts, a little extra Vitamin D can aid in providing that good aura you feel when flying through your summer reading.

You can take your book any place with you, but cannot always bring that place with you and your book. Still, losing yourself in your surroundings as your eyes follow the words is part of the experience. Taking the time to think through what aspects of the summer atmosphere you most appreciate can lead you to the right setup in your own home. Add your imagination to the mix, and you will be reading at the beach, under a tree, or on the grass, at least in your mind.

find that, along with my yoga and my detoxifying teas, along with my strolls through the park and the furious activity of my pen, I sometimes need something really stupid in which to indulge.

Perhaps I am just rationalizing the fact that I watched "90210" three times this week, and I know more about Kelly Taylor's love life than I do about my own. But I will tell you that when I got home from a long day, and I realized I had missed the last yoga class of the evening, I reluctantly flipped on the television. When I heard that cheesy saxophone rhythm that signals the beginning of another hour-long reprieve from reality, I was unabashedly excited. And I slipped on the banana peel of bad drama, and slid into an abyss of unreality. When I emerged, I felt like I had just returned from a vacation from myself.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

It has been evident this past year that a high number of commercial listings have hit the East End market. Numerous motels, restaurants, vineyards, retail space, and equestrian properties have either changed hands or remain for sale. It seems that the owners of these very lucrative and valuable properties are choosing to cash-in while the market is still bringing big numbers. A retail space on the corner of Main Street in the village of East Hampton sold for $8 million this year. The Deep Hollow Ranch in Montauk, the oldest cattle ranch in America and family-owned for generations, has been on the market since the spring at $17 million. The Farmers Market on Main Street, in Amagansett, was added to the list earlier this year.

Adding to that, various marinas from just about every East End point on both Forks have also entered the market.

Early this spring, East Hampton Point Resort & Marina, in the Three Mile Harbor area of East Hampton, was listed for $55 million, coming in as one of the highest-priced listings on the East End. The 58-slip marina is set on 5 acres that include 13 shingle-style guest cottages. It also offers a harborfront restaurant set on 400 feet of waterfront. There is a launch, a filling station, repair shop, general store, a pool, and tennis courts. Although there was much speculation on a deal this summer, the property is still currently listed with Town & Country Real Estate in East Hampton.

On Shelter Island, for $12 million another marina entered the market early this past season. This one has 78 boat slips and is set on a little more than 3 acres on Coecles Harbor. Shelter Island is a boater's paradise that is popular mostly with sailors and is known for its pristine waters and more secluded harbors. This marina can accommodate boats up to 60' and also includes boat storage and repair buildings. There is a breakfast café as well as a 3200-square-foot catering hall, an outdoor bar, a game room, and dock house.

In Montauk, the marina for sale boasts ten acres and 22 boat slips. Here there is 500 feet of waterfront. The ten acres includes 5 underwater acres as well as 5 upland acres. The property contains 14 motel units, 9 of which have kitchenettes, and is located in walking distance to the Montauk airport. The compound also includes a private residence and a horse barn. It is also listed with Town & Country Realty in East Hampton.

On the North Fork, there is a marina for sale in Mattituck at $3.5 million. It is listed exclusively with Long Island Realty Agents Inc. This property consists of four upland acres and has 650 feet of bulkheaded waterfront on Mattituck Inlet that leads directly out to the Long Island Sound. Its zoning allows not only for a marina, but for a potential heliport, residence, motel & restaurant. The deepwater dockage will also allow for larger boats. This marina, which is located on Mill Road in Mattituck, is the only marina currently for sale on the North Fork. It is zoned Marine 2. Broker Michael Harmon says he sees this property as an excellent opportunity for an investor looking to capitalize on the growing popularity of the North Fork.

What makes marina properties so desirable here on the East End is the fact that it is difficult for buyers or developers to gain the proper permits and variances on undeveloped land that are already in place on existing commercial properties. Marinas, in particular, are some of the most difficult sites to develop due to the strict regulations imposed on the shorelines and wetlands which have come about in recent years. It is not only challenging but costly to any perspective buyer or developer to face such obstacles. These factors make the opportunity to purchase an existing business far more appealing than starting from scratch.

Clearly, only a small minority of men will ever go through the battle with breast cancer, but with men, it is different. The male chest doesn't carry the same significance as women's chests do. For those men that will only experience breast cancer through their significant other, there are support groups and hotlines that can help. Surviving breast cancer doesn't have to be a two-against-the-world scenario. Speaking to women and men that have gone through everything you are going through can help tremendously.

As a man, your job is to listen. The majority of you aren't doctors. It isn't your body. You have no real control over anything. You must accept that and then go forward. Supporting and listening to your significant other is so important. You can spend days on the internet doing research, but without listening to what is actually going on in her life, you will be completely lost.

You must also maintain your sense of humor. As they say, laughter is the best medicine. In studies, women seem to truly appreciate a sense of humor when staring adversity in the face. Don't change who you are, trying to be someone you're not isn't the answer. Be yourself. Don't walk on eggshells. Anyone can pick up on apprehension, and people in a heightened sense of awareness will see it in an instant. It makes matters worse.

Bring flowers. It sounds silly, but little things can make a big difference. A bouquet of her favorite flowers is a simple, yet appreciated, way of showing your affection. It is these little things that can change everything. All the doctors in the world cannot restore a sense of being and happiness. Your job is to be strong and supportive, to listen when she speaks, to make her life more enjoyable; get her mind off the struggle, but also deal with the disease. When in doubt, and as often as you can, tell her she's strong and amazing and beautiful.

KEEPING AN EYE ON THE ROAD

Dear Dan,

Lately, while you enjoy a leisurely weekend drive, day-tripping to Montauk for steamers on the dock, or bird-watching in Hither Hills, I can be found mulling around the backyard, weeding, hosing, but mostly sweating. I'll do anything; even re-shingle the roof, not to have to get in the car.

I'll admit that I've never been what you would call a great passenger. Just ask my husband, the guy who's threatened to eject me from the car on numerous occasions during our thirty years of automotive togetherness. Once, he actually pulled over on a major highway, jumped out of the driver's seat and handed me the car keys. "You drive," he bellowed, but we were traveling the Autobahn near Bonn, so I quickly begged for forgiveness. I promised to keep my trap shut until we reached the next foreign country. Observing my husband's obvious frustration with my backseat driving, I quickly recalled a difficult chapter in my youth: driving lessons with dad, and how incredibly nervous I'd become under his Navy commandant, no-nonsense tutelage. One hand posed to grab the wheel, Dad warned; no gum chewing, no blinking or breathing, eyes on the road. Just leaning over to change the radio station was enough to get my fingers slapped. And now, decades later, I'd become him – a driver's education, audio-visual program trapped in the body of a tense, pre-menopausal woman.

Though a tough decision, eventually I decided it was time to ease up to try and relax and enjoy the ride. Then something wonderful happened, and something very scary. We moved here – to the glorious Hamptons, where the sunsets and beaches rival any vacation spot in the world, but where driving somewhere to partake in all that beauty means putting your life in other people's hands. People who should stay put and feed the birds.

Even though the size of these vehicles can be daunting, I understand why some people drive mammoth Navigators, Hummers and Rovers. Because if they haven't actually caused an accident, their operators have a better chance of surviving one. Especially after some kamikaze moron decides to pass on a two-lane highway, not one car, but four or five and head straight for you in your one measly, pot-holed since January, half-a-lane. That's when you think: This is it. I'm going to die. There's no time to freshen your lipstick or spit out your gum.....You actually may hear yourself say the words—I'm a goner. But then, if you're lucky or have given a great deal to charity, miraculously that same moron grins at you as he grazes on by.

That's when you remember to breathe, after which you scream every expletive you've collected since seventh grade and stowed in your memory bank. Please note: None of this is to be taken lightly. Unless you've been immersed underwater, you know how each and every week the papers are filled with reports of awful accidents. Much too often lives are lost due to carelessness behind the wheel—stemming from a plethora of negligent acts: cell phone yapping, running pedestrian crossings, and more often than not from driving under the influence combined with insane speeding. Everyone is rushing. It seems as though they are dividing their time into the costs per minute of Hampton time. Not a moment to be missed.

I used to think that I could control my fate on the road; I now know that it simply isn't true. Driving out here has little to do with control; it is more about luck and the power of prayer. I learned this, only recently, on one sun-filled perfect afternoon while enthusiastically running errands for my pregnant daughter's arrival. I was about to what would make would be my last left turn ever onto Route 27. Thankfully by my own choice, too. Because the coast was completely clear and one of those morons I'd mentioned earlier pulled out of a stalled line of westbound traffic and come plowing into my eastbound lane, head on. We were about to collide, a blur of white against white, a circus act of death played out in front of yawning truckers traveling home after a long day.

When I was finally able to pull over, I sat for quite a while shaking. I thanked all the angels hovering above me—my Dad among them. I saw how easily an accident could happen and how all the prudence in the world wouldn't necessarily change the hands of fate. My fingers became claws. I gripped the steering wheel for dear, dear life and hurried home.

Thanks.

WHAT A NICE LETTER

Dear Dan,

Dear David,

We read your recent article in Dan's Paper's on the BE NICE sign in Southampton and we were absolutely thrilled to see some attention brought to this wonderful effort to spread some kindness.

As someone who clearly understands the value of altruism and considerations in this ever frenetic and impersonalized world, we thought you would appreciate an advance galley of our new book The Power of Nice, with a foreword by Jay Leno (Doubleday/Currency, September 19, 2006).

Drawing from your own experiences and the stories of others, we flip the age-old mantra of "nice guys finish last" on its head, exposing it as a lie that actually undermines success not only in business, but in every aspect of your life. As you can attest, being "nice" at the office impacts every part of an employee's life- and the all-important bottom line.

In an era when the corporate world glorifies a dog-eat-dog mentality, we built The Kaplan Thaler Group, one of the nation's fastest growing advertising agencies, by rejecting the idea that success is a zero-sum game and accepting that collaboration and kindness are the keys to creating a sensation. In other words, success truly lies in the power of nice.

We hope that you enjoy The Power of Nice and we invite you to join our nice community at www.thepowerofnice.com.

Many thanks.

Police Blotter

'07 Bitch's

Last week police found the words "07 Bitch's" sprayed in red paint on Ocean Avenue in East Hampton. We have mentioned this story for a couple of reasons; the first is that it is incredibly funny that the high school girls that did this spelled "bitches" wrong, and the second is that who takes pride in calling themselves bitches? And we were excited to have an excuse to publish the word "bitches."

* * *

Intruder Alert

A woman in Amagansett called police and reported that an intruder had used her bathroom and slept in her beds. She also reported that garbage was left in her place. Police have ruled out Goldilocks as a suspect.

* * *

Charges?

A man in East Hampton called police after he noticed that over $1,000 worth of charges were made to his credit card. The man was quoted as saying to his wife, "Honey, I swear, I have no idea who made those charges to the strip club. My card was stolen, I tell ya!" Police have closed the investigation and have left the matter up to the credit card company.

Instant Messaging A Fight

A kid in East Hampton called police after he received an instant message from another kid saying that he wanted to fight. Police told the boy not to have any further contact with the rude instant messenger. They also suggested that he put the boy on his "blocked" list.

* * *

Joy Ride

Somebody in Montauk took a car from a restaurant parking lot without asking, drove it around Montauk and then parked it at South Euclid Avenue with the keys in the ignition. This is not the first time something like this has happened in Montauk this year. The joy-rider has earned himself a legendary nick-name: Stealacars.

* * *

By The Way

The wetsuit that we reported missing in this blotter was recovered last week by Karen Foley and returned to Dan's Papers writer and photographer Christian McLean in perfect condition after Foley read the "wetsuit missing" article and saw one of her employees walk in with the suit. Christian later went surfing and is a very happy camper now that his wetsuit is back. It's little things like this that make being the police blotter writer here worth it.

* * *

Stolen Chair!

A man in Wainscott reported to police that somebody stole his green metal chair and table, worth $40, from his property last week. I got news for you buddy, nobody stole your $40 table and chair. And even if somebody did, nobody cares.

* * *

Oh, Deer

A woman in Sag Harbor reported to police that somebody had taken 100 feet of plastic fence, two cedar posts, and four metal posts off of her property. She put up the fence to keep deer out of her yard. Police told the woman that the best way to keep deer out of her yard is to shoot them with a BB gun.

A man in Water Mill reported that his $50 Ogio backpack, which contained $50 board shorts, a $10 t-shirt and a $350 T-Mobil Sidekick, was taken from his friend's unlocked car. Police were quoted saying to the man, "That's a major bummer, dude."
